Reagan back in 'exceptionally good condition'

WASHINGTON (AP) President Reagan rebounded Tuesday from gunshot surgery in "exceptionally good condition" and with a strong dose of humor as he signed a major economic bill and resumed command of the country.

Vice President George Bush said the chief executive was rosycheeked and looked robust as he took up presidential business from his hospital bed early in the morning. Bush, meanwhile, assumed the president's day-today White House schedule.

The 70-year-old president was described by doctors as being in "excellent spirits," fewer than 24 hours after an assailant's bullet was removed from his left lung.

"It's pretty much business as usual, with the vice president pinch-hitting for the president," said Bush spokesman Peter Teeley.

AT THE White House, lunchtime crowds milled outside the black iron fence under sunny skies. Inside the gates, aides took pains to portray the government as functioning normally.

Bush directed a Cabinet meeting, met with congressional leaders, and greeted the visiting prime minister of the Netherlands, Andreas A.M. Van Agt.

White House communications were installed at the George Washington University Hospital, where Reagan was recuperating, seven blocks west of the White

Reagan appointments secretary David Fisher set up an office there, and deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said "there's not a lot of difference from him (Reagan) being in the Oval Office."

"We're fully prepared to take care of anything," Speakes said. "He's fully able to function as he would be anywhere in the world."

WHITE HOUSE Chief of Staff James Baker said that shortly after the wounded president reached the hospital Monday, "full communications" were opened between the medical center, the White House situation room and the airplane carrying Bush back to Washington from a speaking trip to Baker insisted the administration was prepared at all times "for any contingency that might arise."

The chief of staff refused to say whether the United States had sought assurances from the Soviet Union or warned Moscow not to try to take advantage of the situation.

Baker said that after Reagan was attacked Monday, Gerry Parr, the chief of the Secret Service's presidential protection detail, ordered Reagan's limousine to return the president to the White House. But on the way, the president complained of soreness of the ribcage and "he may have complained of difficulty in breathing," Baker said. The course was changed and the limousine headed for the hospital.

Baker said his deputy, Michael Deaver, called from the motorcade and told him the president had not been struck in the gunfire. Not until the president "collapsed" in the emergency room after walking in from his car, did aides realize Reagan was wounded, Baker said.

Deaver then called Baker, still at the White House, and Baker summoned Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. there.

Baker said he headed for the hospital and when he arrived suggested that Haig, as the senior Cabinet officer, should be in charge in the situation room until Bush arrived.

Congressional leaders were briefed on the Hinckley letters by Attorney General William French Smith.

Last October, Hinckley was arrested for weapons possession in Nashville, Tenn., on the day that President Carter was to campaign in the city.

John Hinckley was given tranquilizers and held without bond at a Marine base in Virginia, awaiting psychiatric testing to determine if he is competent to stand trial on a charges of attempting to assassinate the president and assault upon a federal

The letter, the sources said, reflected that Hinckley, the 25-year-old son of a wealthy Denver oilman, was in an "I don't care what happens to me" frame of mind.

Administration and congressional sources, who declined to be identified, said Hinckley's letter spelled out his plans in detail. They did not elaborate.

Earlier Tuesday, Sen. Paul Laxalt (R-Nev.) said authorities established a motive in the atttempted assassination, in which President Reagan, his press secretary and two law officers were shot.

However, Laxalt refused to divulge details, and there was no public word from other officials whether the discovery of the letter was linked to the suspected motive.

Hinckley, confined to a 6-by 10-foot private cell, was being watched around the clock by at least two U.S. marshals, said Bill Dempsey, a spokesman for the U.S. Marshals Service.

Hinckley appeared subdued and unemotional throughout a 45-minute hearing at midnight Monday before federal magistrate Arthur Burnett.

An attempt on the life of a president is a federal crime carrying a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, and an assault on a Secret Service agent is punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Charges were yet to be filed in connection with the shootings of press secretary James Brady and a local police officer.

The U.S. attorney prosecuting the case said Hinckley previously had psychiatric care and was arrested on a charge of illegal possession of weapons in Nashville, Tenn. on Oct. 9, the same day then-President Jimmy Carter was in the city.

At Hinckley's family home in Evergreen, Colo., a suburb of Denver, family attorney Jim Robinson confirmed that Hinckley was under psychiatric care. He described Hinckley's parents as "heartbroken," but determined to stand behind their son.

Panel, film discuss feeding in underdeveloped areas

The promotion of infant formula in underdeveloped countries by Nestle and other corporations, and the boycott on Nestle products is still an issue and was the topic of a panel discussion Tuesday.

A CBS documentary film, "Into the Mouths of Babes," and a panel discussion on the implications of international corporate marketing of infant formula in third world nations was presented at 3:30 in the Union Big Eight Room. The panel members were Robert Lynn, dean of the College of Business Administration; Doug Kopp, sophomore in political science and a member of the Coalition for Human Rights; and Sandy Godwin, graduate student in foods and nutrition. Generals overthrow Thai government BANGKOK, Thailand — Thai army generals overthrew the yearold government of Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda in a pre-dawn coup Wednesday and established a Revolutionary Committee to rule the country, Radio Thailand announced.

The coup came one day after Thailand allowed Indonesian commandos to assault a hijacked Indonesian jetliner at the Bangkok airport and free 55 hostages, but there was no indication that was connected with Prem's ouster.

A radio announcement said the generals, considered pro-Western as was Prem, seized power "because of the deteriorating situation. Several political parties are undermining the stability of the government with an intention of taking over the country and changing it into a dictatorial state."

It reported that Gen. Sant Chitpatima, deputy commander-in-chief of the army, was the head of the Revolutionary Committee and that Prem had resigned as prime minister and commander-in-chief of the army.

The constitution was abolished and the Cabinet and Parliament dissolved by the committee.

Leadership accepts vote to end strike

GDANSK, Poland — The Solidarity leadership voted Tuesday night to accept independent union chief Lech Walesa's decision to call off a general strike, despite dissatisfaction with the agreement Walesa worked out with the government.

Soviet-led land, sea and air military exercises were reported continuing in and around Poland, and Polish officials mounted urgent missions to the West for economic aid.

The vote on agreeing to call off the strike, taken by a show of hands, was 25-4 with 6 abstentions, according to the count announced in the meeting. The national coordinating commission numbers 55 but not all are voting members.

After more debate on other aspects of the agreement, the commission recessed for the night without lifting the strike alert that has been in effect since March 20, and decided to resume at 10 a.m. Wednesday (2 a.m. CST). Walesa's bargain with the government had forestalled a nationwide strike that was to begin Tuesday.

Shooting prompts dinner cancellation

WASHINGTON — With striking miners voting about 2-1 against a proposed contract for the Appalachian coal fields, United Mine Workers (UMW) officials admitted Tuesday that the pact will probably be rejected.

Eldon Callen, the UMW's chief spokesman, said that with about 102,600 votes counted from almost 160,000 rank-and-file members, there were 68,937 votes against the settlement and 32,299 in favor of it. Callen said no more figures would be available until votes come in from western and midwestern districts.

UMW President Sam Church reportedly was unwilling to concede "at this time," Callen said. But he added that "it doesn't look like it will pass."

Callen, speaking to reporters at UMW headquarters in Washington, said the union "would do everything in our power" to prevent a long strike.

Union miners have been on strike since Friday, when the old contract expired.

Academy presents Oscar awards

HOLLYWOOD — "Ordinary People," the story of a wealthy family torn apart by the tragic death of a son, was named best picture of 1980 and Robert Redford won an Oscar for directing the film at the 53rd Academy Awards Tuesday night, Sissy Spacek, as country singer Loretta Lynn in "Coal Miner's Daughter," and Robert DeNiro, as the blustery boxer Jake La Motta on the skids in "Raging Bull," won Oscars as best actress and actor.

Mary Steenburgen, as Melvin Dummar's kooky first wife in "Melvin and Howard," and Timothy Hutton, as the disturbed younger son in "Ordinary People," won as best supporting actress and actor.

The somewhat subdued ceremonies—delayed 24 hours because of the shooting of President Reagan—opened with a straight-faced Johnny Carson discussing the events in Washington, and introducing a brief greeting that Reagan, a former film actor, had taped two weeks ago.

"Tess," the adaptation of Thomas Hardy's classic novel "Tess of the d'Urbervilles" won for art direction by Pierre Guffroy and Jack Stephens, and for costume design of Anthony Powell.

Controls needed

Despite all the precautions and all the planning, it happened again. Someone decided to kill the president Monday. In the process he seriously wounded three other people in addition to President Reagan.

How many more lives have to be lost before some kind of controls are enacted.?

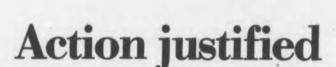

John Hinckley Jr., the man arrested in the attempted assassination of Reagan, recently had been under psychiatric care. Furthermore, he had been arrested while carrying handguns in Nashville, Tenn. on a day former President Jimmy Carter visited the city. Yet it was relatively easy for the man to purchase a gun.

According to FBI statistics, approximately half of the 21,456 murders in the United States last year were committed with handguns, or one handgun murder every 50 minutes.

The National Coalition to Ban Handguns claims that handguns are used in the deaths of 23,000 Americans annually, through murders, accidents and suicides.

Much debate has centered on gun control in the past. The time to discuss it further has long past. America will never know if gun control laws are effective unless they are instituted. The government cannot legislate behavior, but it can legislate the availability of tools which allow certain behavior. Lobby for gun control now, while support for the movement is at a high pitch.

PAUL STONE Opinions Editor

The announcement came as a shock to many members of press and the public Monday as Secretary of State Alexander Haig declared that "crisis management is in effect." Haig had declared himself in charge of the White House until Vice President Bush returned to Washington.

The reporters were right. Constitutionally, Haig was wrong. But on all other counts Haig was right in his announcement.

The attempted assassination of President Reagan caused immediate chaos in Washington.

No one knew how badly Reagan was injured and the vice president was in Texas.

The vulnerable situation in El Salvador still existed Monday as it does today.

The Reagan administration's concerns over the crisis in Poland were mounting each day.

The United States, its allies and other foreign nations needed to be assured that someone was in control. The situation demanded it. Considering that Bush was not in the city, Haig made a rational decision.

Haig's only mistake was trying to justify his actions to the press.

Selective coverage

Editor,

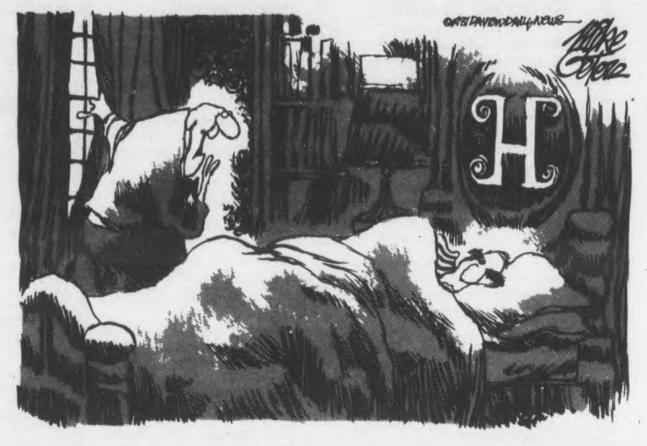

This letter is in regards to the coverage that the Collegian did not give to our campus cleanup program on March 27.

I called the Collegian on March 25 and informed an assistant editor about the upcoming event. In our conversation I asked if this event would be covered by the Collegian. The editor replied that if it was newsworthy it would be covered. I asked what is considered newsworthy. The editor replied that if it is a fire or something, the Collegian covers it, if it is a paper drive it is not covered.

Being at this university for my fourth year, I have seen many articles in the Collegian that I would not consider newsworthy compared to our program we organized. When you have three of the largest groups on campus (A.R.H., Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council) sponsoring a program benefiting the campus like campus cleanup did, then I feel the Collegian should cover it.

Michael Pezza senior in political science

SECRETARY HAIG ... THE SUN IS READY TO RISE WHENEVER YOU ARE ...

-Kent Singer-

Where do we go from here?

In this bullet-infested environment we loosely term a democracy, presidential assassination attempts no longer shock our senses. Anyone of college age can all too well recite the litany of attempts on the lives of public figures. John Kennedy and brother Bobby. Malcolm X. Martin Luther King. John Lennon. Men whose backgrounds, purposes and results were vastly different, but who were united by the common denominator of an assassin's bullet.

AS A 4-YEAR-OLD, I didn't understand at the time what John Kennedy's murder meant. I just knew that my parents were deeply saddened over the passing of someone whom they had never even met. I couldn't understand their complete respect and love for the man and, possibly more importantly, the office he held. When a magnetic and vibrant Bobby Kennedy was shot, I again could not understand the magnitude of despair which oozed out of a distraught America. Martin King's death illicited an even greater sweep of grief. America mourned the end of a man dedicated to welding the gross split between black and white.

And John Lennon. The potentate of the psychedelic '60's. A musical genius whose lyrics of love gave hope to confused youth, and whose death scarred millions of his disciples.

so as I sat watching the television Monday, the bulletin seemed somehow unreal. Only minutes after the shooting occurred, the whole scenario unfolds before me via the magic of videotape. Shots are fired, president Reagan is flung into the limousine, wounded men fall to the pavement, secret service agents brandish weapons, John Warnock Hinkley, Jr. disappears under a mountain of men.

It didn't feel real or immediate. Surely this is just a scene from a Kojak rerun, maybe a newsreel of a Red Brigade hit in Italy. No, its happening in Washington.

Then came the barrage of conflicting reports. Reagan was not shot. Reagan was shot. There were five shots. There were six. The weapon used was a .38 caliber handgun. It was a .22. James Brady is dead. Brady is still clinging to life. The action is run again, rerun, run in slow motion, overrun.

IN CALAMITIES such as this, though, the television press may be forgiven for miscues or innocent hyperbole. Theirs is an impossible job. They want to satisfy the needs of an information-starved public while only relating absolute fact. ABC's Frank Reynolds displayed his professionalism in restraint. He tried not to interject theories or hypotheses. Although he initially reported that the president had not been shot, further information was double-checked. Despite the fact that ABC had only sketchy details and probably had no business being on the air, Reynolds filled in as best he could and reiterated the fact that certain reports were only assumptions and had not been verified. His desire for exactness and authenticity of information in a chaotic atmosphere was evidenced in his manner on the air.

SO WHERE DO we go from here? There will of course be volumes of reports, accusations, theories, hearings, investigations, and so on. John Warnock Hinkley, Jr.'s life will be dissected, probed, psychoanalyzed, and splayed out for all to see. Handgun control proponents will rightly demand an end to the carnage, an end to those damn Saturday Night Specials.

In the end, though, there exists a perverse twist of irony. We elect a president who vows to fight foreign aggressors, only to find that his most feared enemies speak the same language, breathe the same air, trod the same soil.

According to the film, the controversy concerns the advantages of breast feeding over bottle feeding in underdeveloped countries. In Santa Domingo, malnutrition is the biggest cause of infant deaths. The switch from breast milk to bottle feeding plays a significant role in the death rate.

THE FORMULA being sold to these countries is nutritious but the water available to mix with the formula is often unsanitary, according to the film.

"It becomes a recipe for disaster," the film documented.

During the discussion, Kopp said that in order for a mother to safely use the formula, four requirements must be met.

The formula must be affordable, clean water must be available, the mother must be able to read the instructions and refrigeration must be available.

In underdeveloped countries these requirements are not easily met, Kopp said.

Godwin said although nutritionists usually promote breast feeding, there are cases in which the use of formula is preferred. For example, women in underdeveloped countries who work and leave rice water for their baby need an alternate source of food for their child. Unlike American working women, women in third world countries don't always know they can extract milk from their breasts and save it, she said.

"If it's rice water when compared to diluted formula, I'd rather have the formula any day," Godwin said.

BECAUSE MOST of the women in underdeveloped countries are malnourished, they are unable to provide nutritious milk for their babies, Godwin said.

"They are capable to breast feed, but not adequately," Godwin said.

Many women in underdeveloped countries also don't realize that once they stop breast feeding, they will stop producing milk. According to the film, this is the origin of many of the problems.

The woman is given free samples of the formula from the hospital, she uses the formula until she runs out and by that time, her milk supply is dried up and she is forced to buy more formula.

According to the film, the average monthly income is less than $200, so buying formula is difficult to finance. The formula costs about $2.50 per can and the average mother uses 10 cans each month. Because the formula takes such a large part of the monthly income, the mothers in underdeveloped countries often dilute it to make it last longer—therefore reducing its nutritional value.

The formula is being promoted by hospitals and doctors in the third world for several reasons, but according to Stewart, the financial benefits are "extremely significant."

A BOYCOTT against all Nestle products has been in effect for several years because they are the biggest supplier of formula to third world countries.

"Nestles has the major share of the market," Kopp said.

The boycott has had enough of an impact to "make them nervous," Stewart said.

Attack incites agency investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Secret Service is off on the inevitable soul search, trying to answer how President Reagan could have been shot on home turf, barely a mile from the White House.

"These guys were competing with a bullet," said Jack Warner of the Secret Service, the agency charged with protecting presidents.

Warner said Tuesday the service is conducting an in-house investigation to see whether the agents surrounding Reagan made any wrong moves or could have prevented the gunman from firing six shots at the president Monday afternoon as he was leaving the Washington Hilton Hotel.

"After reviewing the video tapes a dozen times, we believe the presidential protection was as effective as it could possibly be," Warner said. "These guys were competing with a bullet. They moved as quickly as they could."

Warner said the investigation is similar to those conducted after John Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas and Gerald Ford escaped injury in two separate California assaults. It will include extensive interviews with agents and other law officers at the scene, as well as eyewitnesses.

"The reason is to see whether we did everything that we should have," he said. "We have no answers yet."

On most occasions when Reagan leaves the White House, he is accompanied by at least a dozen Secret Service agents, all armed with handguns. Some carry small, light, Uzi submachine guns. In situations like Monday, Reagan is proceeded out of the hotel by one agent. Several others walk on either side of him. As the president leaves a building, the agents form a human shield between him and everyone else. While he walks to his car, a time agents consider particularly vulnerable, the armored door is opened to provide another shield.

Agents follow Reagan's car in their own vehicle known as the "war wagon," a Cadillac with running boards for agents to stand on and a trunk filled with Uzi submarines, M-16 rifles and hand grenades.

The assault on Reagan was the first in the nation's capital since Puerto Rican Nationalists tried to storm the Blair House across the street from the White House to kill Harry Truman in 1952.

Dr. Daniel Ruge, Reagan's personal physician, said Tuesday morning that the president is in "exceptionally fine condition" after surgery Monday for removal of a bullet from his left lung.

The investigation continues to indicate that the gunman acted alone.

Warner added that he doesn't know whether the assassination attempt will prompt changes in the security measures surrounding the president.

"We're not sure whether it will alter Secret Service procedures in the future," he said. "We'll know better at the end of the investigation."

Zoo to dedicate primate building

By CINDY WILSON Collegian Reporter

Spring is here and if you're looking for a different place to escape to, Manhattan's Sunset Zoo may be the answer.

The zoo, set in the hills of Manhattan, houses many different animal species and with help from city revenue sharing bonds and private donations, there are improvements on the way, according to Sandra Caswell, head zookeeper.

The E.J. Frick Primate Building is the zoo's most recent project and will open on Memorial Day with a dedication ceremony from the Friends of the Zoo, an organization which raises donations specifically for Sunset Zoo.

The organization was going to make it a "full blown" celebration, according to Tom Roberts, treasurer of Friends of the Zoo, but because of the recent resignation of the zoo's director, Tom Demry, Roberts is skeptical of a large celebration. Demry cited personal reasons for resigning two weeks ago.

PRIMATE EXHIBITS, loose parrots and doves and a large reptile exhibit will be the main attractions in the new building.

"You just walk in and the primates are behind glass and the birds will be above head," Caswell said.

The prairie dogs and camel named Charlie

Caswell said the outside exhibits will be natural habitat with dirt floors and grass. The site will consist of a "keeper building and also two outside exhibits."

Also on the drawing board are plans for a hoof-stock exhibit, Caswell said. The completed project will consist of new barns and pens for all the hoof-stock at the zoo. This is just in the planning stage, so funds have not been allocated for this exhibit.

"We'll have a nice heated barn for them all, with a quarantined area," Caswell said. The quarantined area will be used in case the animals are ill or plan to give birth.

With the new facilities, all the animals will be able to reach the barn without having to be caught by a keeper.

THE NEW FACILITIES will be a big help to the keepers because "now we have to go leap on them (the animals)" when trying to catch them, Caswell said.

"A lot of the renovation is being done because the facilities we have now are improper," she said.

Friends of the Zoo raised $10,000 in 1980 and the only requirements to become a member is to have "an interest in animals and the zoo," Roberts said.

THE ZOO RECEIVES most of it's funding from city revenue sharing money and donations. This year the city allocated $144,500 to the zoo. Caswell said the money pays for everything from laundry services to office equipment. Most private donations come from the Friends of the Zoo.

"Friends of the Zoo have put on several promotions and attendance has been outstanding," Caswell said.

The animals are either paid for from city money, donated or loaned from other zoos for breeding.

"Most of the animals we get donated are guinea pigs," Caswell said.

However, the federal government donates eagles and some parrots. Most of these animals are survivors from hunting ac-

"During the summertime the children's zoo is our special attraction," Caswell said. What's so special about the children's zoo is the contact with the animals. Sheep, goats, donkeys and ponies are loose and visitors get to pet everything, she said.

"This year will be the first year for our walk-through deer and llama exhibit."

The animal nursery is also at this site.

"Any baby animals that we have to pull (help with birth) are on display in there," Caswell said.

K-State's University Sing, under the direction of the intrafraternity council, was the organization that "got it (the children's zoo) started," Roberts said. University Sing has donated to the zoo for the past 10 years. According to Roberts, last October during University Sing week, the group raised and donated $2,500.

Another special attraction for the kids are the pony rides in the summer.

"It's pony rides on the week-ends" for just 75 cents, Caswell said.

The prairie dogs and a four-year-old male camel named Charlie seem to receive the most attention from visitors, Caswell said.

The prairie dogs are a big attraction, especially for the kids. Charlie, the obnoxious camel, seems to be so well liked because he's so friendly and acts so strange. However, despite the impression Charlie gives to visitors, Caswell said he can be vicious when someone comes in his pen.

Charlie should be receiving a female companion soon, Caswell said. The Friends of the Zoo have raised $1,000 for another camel.

The main zoo is open now for viewing, and the children's zoo and the primate building will open on Memorial day.

Ax displays polish and sensitivity

By KIMBER WILLIAMS Managing Editor

It is a rare and beautiful phenomenon to actually hear a man's emotions delivered through an intricate maze of ivory keys and piano wire.

However Emanuel Ax, an accomplished pianist, bared his soul for an intimate glimpse into the depths of his artistry last night in McCain Auditorium.

Collegian review

Performing before an enthusiastic audience of more than 600, Ax presented an impressive piano recital in connection with the McCain Series.

Although only in his early thirties, the Polish-born Ax has been crowned as a musical genius with a polished and sensitive skill. Although he should receive laurels for his skill alone, there is an underlying quality that reaches far beyond mere technique.

Ax has the illusive ability to capture the vitality—the living breath of each selection and breathe that living fiber and intensity into his melodies. The listener revels in such sensitivity, but moreover, Ax himself seems to feel the magic that he creates.

He opened the program by visiting with the audience, immediately establishing a carefree casualness with his wry wit and easy smiles.

His first two selections were by Arnold Schoenberg: "3 Pieces, Opus 11" and "6 pieces, Opus 19." This choice offered a fine representation of some of the artist's earliest atonal writings and opened the recital on a dramatic note.

The darkly intense features so commonly connected with poets and artists characterized Ax for he demonstrated he is both.

His full face contorted almost painfully throughout the Schoenberg selections, however that pain was somehow buffered by the ecstatic approval of the audience and an intuitive knowledge of personal achievement.

Ax explained that the opening selections sounded as if Shoenberg had "tried to compress as much as possible into as small a space as possible." He was precisely

The melodies were a combination of tones that suggested an unrelieved tension. The dissonance did not make for "easy listening," but was accomplished brilliantly. Ax even managed to use pauses effectively, threading a wire of dramatic tension across the auditorium.

The audience was granted a lovely treat in his third piece, "Humoreske in B flat major, Opus 20" by Robert Schumann. The Schumann and reflected the range of emotions encountered by those in love.

Beginning with a melancholy, mournful love ballad, Ax was at once bright, alive and moving with a spirited flavor. Gingerly, he dropped back into a tender melody. His face was a mirror to the music, scowling ferociously while pounding over the keyboard, he could suddenly soften his expression during delicate decrecendos.

However, Ax saved the best for last with a selection by Frederick Chopin, "Sonata 7/83 in B minor, Opus 58." Although until 1844 B minor was an infrequently used key for sonatas, the piece provided the perfect selection was written by a love-smitten showcase for a colorful display of Ax's technique, grace and sensitivity. Ax showed a fierceness and intensity that had not been seen before.

> Although he clearly poured himself fully into the performance, he retained the finesse necessary for leaping from soft, whimsical measures into ferociously driving melodies.

After receiving an enthusiastic standing ovation, Ax appeased the audience with two, short encore selections. Standing to leave the stage, there was a pleasantly exhaustive expression on Ax's face-much like that worn by an Olympian after managing to surpass his own records. .

Another black found dead in Atlanta

ATLANTA (AP) - The body of a young black male was found Tuesday floating on the surface of the Chattahoochee River, just two miles from the spot where the 21st victim in Atlanta's string of child slayings was pulled from the water a day earlier. police said.

The special police task force investigating the series of deaths was called to the scene shortly after a canoeist found the second body snagged on a tree limb.

The task force also is investigating the disappearances of two black youths.

Bob Starrett, an investigator with the Douglas County Police Department, said the body found in the muddy water Tuesday appeared to have been there for at least "a few days."

Medical examiners determined that 13year-old Timothy Hill, whose body was found in the river Monday, had been dead at least a week. An autopsy showed the youth had been "gently asphixia ted."

Police had labeled Hill a runaway, but the youth was identified Tuesday as the 21st victim in Atlanta's string of child deaths.

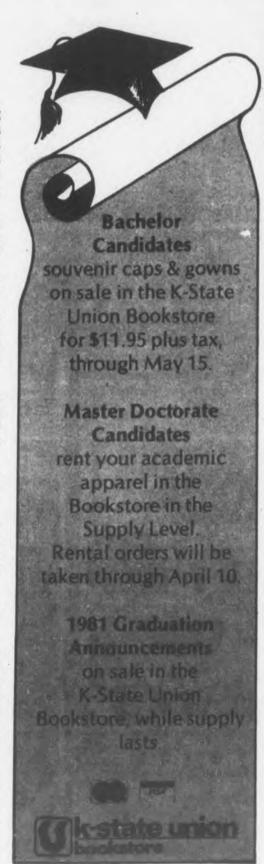

Dr. John Feegel, associate Fulton County medical examiner, said Hill apparently died of asphyxiation at least a week before he was found in the Chattahoochee River on Monday. He disappeared March 13.

"It's one more of the same-black male, teen-age, no marks, no mutilation," Feegel

Hill had been considered a runaway by Atlanta police, who turned his case over to their missing persons bureau rather than the special task force investigating the deaths and disappearances of 22 other black children since July 1979. Officials said they had received reports that Hill had been seen

Members of Hill's family, who participated in a volunteer search for clues last weekend, said then that they had tried to persuade police the boy had been "snatched."

Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown declined comment on the case.

Commission candidates present personal views, qualifications

By GERI GREENE Collegian Reporter

Five of the six city commission candidates agreed Tuesday that downtown redevelopment is needed in Manhattan. However, they still differ in their views on the proposed redevelopment project. Wanda Fateley, Dave Fiser, Suzanne Lindamood, Henry Martin and Larry Morgan discussed their views on downtown redevelopment in a candidate forum sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce at Houston Street Pub and Restaurant. The sixth candidate, Glenn Busset, was absent because of a prior out-of-state commitment.

As the forum began, the candidates gave an opening one-minute remark and then fielded questions from the audience. The forum concluded with brief summations by each candidate.

One person asked the candidates to answer "yes" or "no," if they favored the proposed downtown mall.

question affirmatively.

"I have been there through this process from the beginning and mine is an unqualified yes," Fately said.

"Yes," Fiser said. "I feel the city comdowntown mall and have done their right.' homework."

Morgan said he does not favor the proposed mall.

"No, I do not favor a proposed downtown mall that is publicly financed," he said.

Martin followed suit. "There are a lot of questions on the downtown mall that need to be answered," Martin said. "I would not favor the mall until all the finance questions are answered," he said.

Lindamood refused to answer the.

"I do not give unqualified yes and no answers," she said.

THE CANDIDATES took similiar stands on the financing of the mall.

Both Fately and Fiser said the mall wouldn't be a "taxpayer mall."

"In the current plan there is no call for increased property taxes for Manhattan citizens," Fiser said.

Lindamood, Martin and Morgan said they believed the proposed mall would be a "taxpayer mall."

Attack on president stuns Coretta King

HAYS (AP) - Coretta Scott King, widow of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., said Tuesday she was "shocked and greatly disturbed" at the attack on President Reagan.

Speaking at a news conference at Fort Hays State University, King said the Monday shooting incident in Washington reminded her of her own experience 13 years ago this week, when her husband was assasinated in Memphis, Tenn.

"I also again reflected on how important it is that the American people take some action against the extreme violence in our society," King told reporters at the university, where she was scheduled to speak at a convocation."

She also stressed the need for gun control legislation.

Referring to the continuing murders of black children in Atlanta, she said the tragedies have brought the city together.

"Just because it's not a general obligation bond used to finance the mall doesn't mean it's not a taxpayer-financed mall," Lindamood said.

Martin agreed.

"Using tax increment financing means we are responsible for the bonds so this is taxpayer funding," he said.

IN REFERENCE to a question which asked the candidates if they have received significant contributions from land developers, the Westside Homeowners Association, the Older Manhattan Neighborhood Association or Concerned Citizens for Manhattan, all of the candidates said they have not. However, some candidates said they have received contributions from individuals who may be members of these groups.

Morgan said he received a $1,000 contribution from one individual. But "it was with no strings attached," he said.

"I promised I would represent the in-FATELY AND FISER answered the dividual fairly and I have no qualms accepting that contribution since there are no strings," Morgan said.

Fiser said no one has contributed in excess of $100 to his campaign.

"I would not accept contributions of mission and their staff have studied the $1,000," Fiser said. "I don't think it would be Fateley and Lindamood both said they have received contributions from individual members of the organizations, but not from the groups as a whole.

Martin, however, was unsure about his campaign contributors.

"I turn all funds to my campaign treasurer, but I don't think I have received large contributions from land developers,' Martin said.

Busy students choose unusual 'perfect pets'

Collegian Reporter
The old adage may be "Dog is man's best friend," but for some, creatures such as piranhas, boa constrictors or ferrets may be better choices. Because these pets are often independent and require less care than the traditional pets such as dogs or cats, some K-Staters have chosen them as pets.

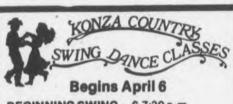

Beth Dorton, Beta Sigma Psi housemother, has had pets since she was a child. Now she owns a boa constrictor, a ferret, a kitten, a dog and two horses. All the animals live with her at the fraternity house except the horses, which she keeps at a friend's home in the country in exchange for riding privileges.

For Dorton, having a pet means devoting much time and affection to them.

"I can't see the objective in having a pet if they don't have the time to spend with them," she said.

For this reason, she recommends a snake as a good pet for a busy student.

"Snakes make great pets for busy students because they just sit there," Dorton said.

Tudig resigns as chancellor; butler wants button power

By R.U. GAY Campus Beat

Flaw on the Kaw

Downriver

In a surprise move which sent shock waves through the campus community Tuesday, Chancellor Les Tudig resigned from his recently acquired post at the East Kansas Snob Institute.

Snob Tute officials were perplexed by the reasoning for Tudig's departure after the man who recently entered the state's highest paying job had recently said he was "excited about being at a college which can actually name one of its streets after the inventor of basketball."

Only those in the former chancellor's select circle seemed to be able to relate anything substantial about his resignation.

Tudig's butler Idig Tu cited the lack of a distinct challenge at the institute as being the reason for his sudden departure. Tudig was not available for comment although unconfirmed reports from Saturn missionaries peg the three-week chancellor on a good-will mission in El Salvador.

TU WAS CONFUSED following the resignation as well, declaring to everyone within listening distance, "I'm in charge here. I'm in charge here. There's no line of succession for this type of thing, so I'm in charge."

Witnesses described Tu as emotionally uncontrollable and one onlooker said he thought he heard Tu mumbling, "Where's that red button. He never let me in there (Tudig's private chamber) before. Where's that damn thing at?"

Tudig was reportedly disgusted with the lack of work to do at at Snob Tute, and in confessions with Tu and maid Mimi Dust, said the institute's only problems were finding a capable person to keep the Legislature honest and quit appropriating so much funding to the institute.

According to Dust, Tudig once told her, "It's tough to develop normal relations with that other school up the river when we get all the money. They might come down here with all that sick purple paint or even send a cow or two to chew up our grass."

BOTH OF TUDIG'S subordinates said they had many other items to tell of the chancellor's short stint, but declined from further comment because they are planning on issuing a report to the Board of Regents titled the "Tu-Dust Chronicles."

Speculation concerning Tudig's replacement is spreading along every road from Lawrence to Topeka, with people wondering how conditions could be so good at Snob Tute to force Tudig to leave out of boredom.

"You know they've got the advantages over the years. Why my daughter has even contributed to the spreading of fine education at Snob Tute," one legislator, said.

A source close to former Governor Goat Beard said he was stepping up his morning exercise from 50 to 100 wheat waves. The source also reported the ex-governor would give up his stock in anti-perspirant just to prove to the Board of Regents that he enjoyed sweating out this situation.

CANDIDATES FOR THE job will be dusting resumes despite Mimi's resistance to help any more of these "fool people" again in anticipation of landing the highest paid position in the state. Yet certainly problems must lurk at Snob Tute if Tudig found it so unbearable.

Tute officials, including professors on the last selection committee, say only those who know how to enjoy life and are able to wreck the institute's current programs will be considered for the job.

Many of these same officials believe the most qualified candidate would have to come from arch-rival Moo U. Although no names were mentioned, a Tute source described the candidate as having a passionate desire to be elevated to loftier heights and a person who enjoys firing well-liked administrators and has a penchant for working in lush, expensive surroundings.

In an unprecedented display of common sense and just plain decency, the Kansas Legislature passed a bill Tuesday that would ban the sale, possession, and advertising of drug paraphernalia.

Most of the students don't even realize that part of the campus is thirty miles away. resulting in frequent mishaps as students speed down the turnpike in jogging suits. With the demise of the demonic head shops, however, this writer is ready to predict that the problem will disappear.

Coughs of protest were immediately heard from Robert Q. Lude of Atchison, owner of Excommunication Records and Papers and spokesman for the Amalgamated Heads Union. "Look man, this is crap,

News Briefs

FROM KANSAS SILAGE UNIVERSITY (KSU)

HARD HEAD-Dr. Grain Auger, president of KSU, fell on a beam in Farrell Library. He's all right, but the beam needs $5.683 worth of hospitalization. Never, his wife, is quoted as saying Grain had broken the floor of their state-provided house when he fell from the top bunk of their bunk beds.

SIDEWALK SHIT-In a concerted effort to clean up KSU, Clean Green. vice president for University Facilities, announced Tuesday that every employee of his department would be required to spend at least 11/2 hours per day scraping pigeon droppings from the campus's highways, byways and sidewalks. He also said anyone caught talking to a Collegian (KSU's school newspaper) reporter would be forced to do the scraping with his tongue.

CATTLE PRATTLE-In an unprecedented experiment, KSU researchers have learned how to keep cows from chewing their cuds. Although the process could be considered somewhat sadistic by humane pinkos, it has received high acclaim from the National Rifle Association. The method apparently involves cutting out the cows' teeth and tongues. Researchers say their work could be expanded to help those humans who grind their teeth at night.

HOOP SCOOP-Speculation among the campus community is that Attack Hard Man will be leaving the silage university this fall for a better offer at Bogue High School. This speculation is widely discounted though, by those in the know. Bogue does not have a high school anymore and sources close to Hard Man say he will never go back to the rigors of high school basketball.

PRESIDENTIAL BITE-Ain't I. Scandelin announced Tuesday that she would relinquish her post as student body president to her obviously more worthy opponent in the recent student elections. Amos G. Sheperd, when contacted about the development by a reporter for the KSU Collegian, said "Rrrgggrrrrrffffffffhhh." A spokesman for Sheperd said the dog considered the Collegian your basic yellow rag, mainly because he uses it to relieve himself on in the house. Crusty Had Kin, campus hobo and editor of the Collegian, was asked to comment. "Nnnrrffgh," Had Kin said. "Ttttthuuuurrgh wwssddddeeerr."

Hill U seeks power surge from state University Daily Chickenhawk News Service

An official at Up the Hill University announced Tuesday that the school would try to obtain funding from the Legislature for a power plant to rival the total power generated by Kansas Power & Light (KPL).

A similar proposal from Down on the Farm State was sent to the legislative slag heap by several state senators who are avowed supporters of a corrupt energy delivery system owned by those who wish to rape the land and plunder the coal fields.

"Our colleagues at F-State attempted several years ago to build a coal-fired power plant to co-generate power on the campus in Manhattan," said the official. "The Legislature was not amenable to that proposition, mainly because the scope of the project was far too small."

The proposed plant at F-State called for an expenditure of anywhere from $15 million to $40 million depending on which prophet of gloom and inflation was citing figures at the

"If they had been reasonable and asked for at least $135 million, they would have had a better chance," the Cloudhawk official said.

"We are planning to produce more energy than any single utility in the state. We plan to trade some of the extra power we produce to Wyoming in exchange for a the coal to run the plant on.

"The rest of the left-over power will be sold at a highly inflated rate to the citizens of Kansas so that we can offer free education," the official said

Hill U has long been trying to become the dominant factor in higher education in the states of Kansas and Missouri. In fact, that has traditionally been one of the schools biggest problems

For any school in Kansas to become wellknown outside the state, it's got to cheat at football and be dumb enough to get caught. No one knows if Hill U has been cheating. because Lolita State is better known for its Hill U has had a schizophrenic outlook on life because it just doesn't fit the state in which it was conceived. Kansas is a rural state, not much given to the false airs of sophistication worn like a mantle about the shoulders of alumni and students from the University of Missouri.

Hill U has attempted to obtain that same sophistication, let hasn't accomplished that

"It's hard to be an apple when your people are all turnips," said an official with the Reagan administration in Washington.

The Cloudhawk official said the school would attempt to put KPL out of business so that Hill U could become the sole energy producer in Northeast Kansas.

"If those fools at F-State would learn how to wine and dine the Legislature, they could get some of the 'extras' we get," the official said. "If we get this power plant, the individual legislators know they'll be able to get a reduced rate on power.

"If we can make enough of a profit on this thing, we might just buy the entire state."

"If we make enough money, we may try to shut down every school west of the Mississippi. God knows, we're the finest academy of higher learning in the New World. We should be given our appropriate place."

Denials clear Chickenhawks

By P.R. MANN Chickenhawk Chickenchit

Through a prolonged investigation which lasted five hours (four were spent waiting for a source to get off the phone), the University Daily Chickenhawk has found out that we aren't guilty of the charges brought out against us by the Kansas City Tar.

The charges were made public in the Tar's Feb. 6 edition, but Chickenhawk Chickenchit was advised by athletic director Mob Barcum and the starting offensive line on the football team not to investigate the allegations until they had time to come up with some lies and, if that wasn't enough, to contact their Italian friends.

"We definitely aren't guilty of those charges," said Barcum as he handed the Chickenhawk Chickenchit a $500 check to cover his semester's subscription of the University Daily Chickenhawk. "If you don't believe me, go ask Hoss (Dicky, a star player on the Chickenhawk basketball team). He'll be off the phone in about four hours."

Barcum was right. Exactly four hours and a cauliflower ear later, Hoss hung up the receiver and started answering questions concerning SAY-HU's pending case with the Probe refutes Tar's accusations

"Ya know, man, that woman can really talk up a storm," said Hoss, never one to hide his ignorance. "Man, it's just a good thing I found that credit-card number laying on coach Wins' (Thad O.) desk."

What do you mean a credit-card number, asked Chickenhawk Chickenchit, putting to use his investigating reporting skills learned from watching Lou Grant. Don't you know that's illegal?

"Ya, man, I know it is," said Hoss. "But, honest, I was planning to pay for all those long-distance calls with those ten $100 bills I found inside my apartment. I guess the cleaning lady accidently left them there."

Okay, Dicky, never mind. Chickenhawk Chickenchit trusts anyone responsible enough to make it to at least two classes a week.

"Thanks, man," said Hoss as he grabbed a set of keys on his way out the door. "Those basket-weaving classes are tough. You have to go at least once a week so the instructor can get to know ya. He don't fix transcripts for just anyone, ya know."

"Gotta be going now," Hoss added. "I think I'll skip basketball practice and go wash my new Cadillac. Some guy, I think he said he has something to do with something called an educational fund, just gave it to me the other day. Said he'd even fly my mama in to check it out. Shoot, that '80 Continental only had a couple scratches on it. Guess that'll be my second car from now on.'

Totally assured that Hoss and SAY-HU were innocent of credit-card misuse charges uncovered late last year by the UDC, the Chickenhawk Chickenchit set out to find Lonnie JonOrr, whom the Tar said was given a summer job mowing lawns.

JonOrr was finally located eating a banana in the Union. "Na, man, they didn't give me no job mowing grass. I may smoke the stuff, but you won't be seeing me mowin' it.

"Man, get the story straight," added JonOrr, tossing a peel on the floor. "I was a tutor. Taught kids how to play basketball. Paid good, too, man. How many people ya know get paid $50 an hour to show kids how to shoot hoops."

So there, Mister Big Shots at the Kansas City Tar. I hope Chickenhawk Chickenchit has finally closed this case for the NCAA. We here at SAY-HU never do anything outside the rules of college sports.

U.S. population grows older

Gerontology enrollment increases

By STEVE CULVER Collegian Reporter

The average age of a person living in the United States increases each day.

Yet instead of searching for the fountain of youth, more people are finding gerontology, the study of aging, more important for coping with this trend.

The interest in gerontology at K-State has increased dramatically, according to Phillip Carter, assistant professor of adult education.

Carter is teaching two courses in gerontology this semester. Introduction to Gerontology has seen a large increase in enrollment this semester. He also teaches a course called Educational Gerontology.

"Normally we have 15 in the class (Intoduction to Gerontology)," Carter said. "This semester we have 52 involved with it. The age range is from 18 to 80."

This is the first large increase in enrollment in this course, Carter said.

"I think it shows there is a trend toward more involvment (in gerontology)," he said.

The interest in gerontology at K-State was recognized two years ago when a secondary major sequence was established.

There are two views of education in the field of gerontology, said Goerge Peters, director of the Center of Aging and associate professor of sociology and anthropology.

"The first is to offer majors in the field of gerontology," Peters said. "Wichita State offers a major in gerontology."

The other point of view stresses geron- this problem.

tology as a multi-disipline study combining aspects from biology, psychology, sociology, political science, social work and speech, Peters said.

The secondary major in gerontology at K-State is based on this point of view. A student involved in this program supplements another major with 24 credit hours in the area of gerontology.

The student is required to complete an introductory and a senior seminar course. The remaining hours can be taken from courses relating to gerontology offered in five different colleges of the University.

Peters believes the dual major program gives the student not only a broader view, but a concentration in another area which will help students looking for jobs and help once the job is obtained.

Currently there are about 45 to 50 students involved in the undergraduate gerontology program.

A new graduate program has been established also, according to Peters. At the present time there are no students involved in the graduate program because it is such a new program.

The largest problem at the present time in the field of gerontology is changing the negative attitudes associated with growing old, Carter said.

"I think the attitudes are changing, but it is a very slow process," he said.

But an ABC executive commented hap-

The students, young and old, involved with Carter's introductory course have dealt with

"We have a number of elderly people and younger people who have convinced me there is no generation gap," Carter said. "There is a communication gap."

The communication gap has been overcome in Carter's class.

"When we have worked together in groups it has been amazing how much the younger people have learned about aging from the elderly people in the class," Carter said.

Carter said he believes the field of gerontology will continue to grow as the United States becomes an older society.

Reagan OKs firm greeting for delayed Oscar evening

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — After a 24-hour delay because of the shooting of the president, the motion picture industry went on with its 53rd Academy Awards on last night—including a taped greeting from President Reagan, who said to "go ahead and use it" despite his condition.

The academy had delayed a decision on whether to televise the remarks that former actor Reagan taped 10 days before the attempt on his life Monday. But at 3 a.m. Tuesday, academy president Fay Kanin received the message from the White House: "The president said to go ahead and use the tape in any way you want."

One change was made in the program: Jack Lemmon will co-present the supporting actor award in place of Kris Kristofferson, who had to return to filming in New York.

The postponement caused some frantic reshuffling all over town. Hotels tried to adjust bookings. Limousine companies rearranged schedules. The Los Angeles Music Center fretted over a symphony concert planned for Wednesday. But the academy show producer promised to strike the TV set overnight; the job ordinarily takes a day.

ABC also had to do some rescheduling. The postponement of the Oscar cast as well as the disruption of programming by Monday's events in Washington cost the network "well over a million dollars," according to a reliable industry source.

"A boa constrictor is real cool, not loud, it just lays there and is fun to play with," he said. "They are the perfect pet-for living in a residence hall they are absolutely perfect."

Madden, a Van Zile resident, said his 5foot boa constrictor has a "good disposition."

"Not much bothers him and most everyone likes him," he said. "The best part is he's not noisy and he doesn't stink."

It is not uncommon for a Van Zile resident to come to Madden's room during the evening and ask to play with the snake, Madden said. Often, that person will pass the snake around to five or six people before it eventually gets back to Madden.

MIKE BECKER, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, got his boa, Fred, from his mother. She bought it for him after his first snake died when Becker's father left the garage door open one night and it froze to His mother brought his second snake back from Florida where she paid about $60. She wrapped the snake in a pillow case and hid it in her purse. Before she was allowed to board the plane, however, she had to convince a security employee at the airport there wasn't a snake in her purse.

Becker said his mother, when questioned by the woman who had seen the snake's skeleton on the X-ray, responded, "Why would I have a snake in my purse?" and the woman replied, "Well, I guess you're right," and allowed Becker's mother to board the plane.

Since his first snake in high school, Becker has enjoyed having a snake as a pet.

"Snakes are exotic, they're different" and they are fun to watch, Becker said.

MANY PET OWNERS feed the snakes mice, rats, baby chicks, rabbits or guinea pigs. Smaller snakes first strangle their prey, but larger snakes can swallow the food without first killing it, according to Paul Grimes, sophomore in general business administration. Grimes owns a Burmese python and a boa, and enjoys watching his

"These snakes strangle it first then they eat it," Grimes said. "They are great show-off items for parties."

HOWEVER, IT IS not unusual for either snake to get "riled up" at a party because of the loud noise. If the snake is angered, Grimes said, it stretches out and sometimes will even strike at people. When this happens, he tells people to leave the room, then turns the music down and the snake will cool off within about 15 minutes.

Grimes keeps his snakes at his parent's house in a closed room. The snakes enjoy heat provided by a sun lamp and usually stay underneath it in warm surroundings.

Some residents of his fraternity don't like having snakes in the house because they are afraid it might get loose some night and end up in one of their beds, he said, thus he's never kept his snakes at the fraternity.

When he stays at home it is not unusual to wake up with one of them wrapped around his leg, Grimes said.

PIRANHAS, JUST LIKE snakes, prey on live animals, and Shawn Barlow, sophomore in general, believes people enjoy watching pirahnas eat.

Barlow's two piranhas will eat two or three minnows a day and he purchases minnows for about 80 cents a dozen. He used to buy goldfish, but at about 30 cents apiece. they were too expensive to use as food.

His interest in piranhas developed last year when his roommate had one. Barlow said he bought a piranha last fall and had to replace it when it died during Christmas break. Meanwhile, one of Barlow's friends gave him his second piranha.

He keeps them in two separate tanks to prevent the larger one from eating the smaller one. Barlow said the piranhas don't eat other fish in the tank because the other fish were already part of the aquarium when he introduced the piranhas to that environment. However, if he puts a new fish in the tank, the piranhas will eat it, he said.

BECAUSE OF THE interest in exotic pets at his fraternity, two of Barlow's friends decided to buy unusual pets.

"Everyone else had weird pets and we wanted something different yet," Kelly · Clair, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "We tried to find a cute pet which would be quiet at night and easy to care for," said Clair's roommate, Jim Buenger, junior in health, physical education and recreation.

Clair said they narrowed their choice to a lizard and a teddy bear hamster, then called two pet stores and changed their minds.

An iguana lizard was the new choice. An interesting characteristic of this pet is his nonchalant attitude towards people,

"He watches you and if you're not watching him, he'll do something, but if he thinks you are watching he'll just sit there and look at you," he said.

They put a cactus in his aquarium to see how he would respond, Buenger said, and when they checked on him later, he was found sleeping on top of the cactus.

ANOTHER ANIMAL which Chris Ludlow, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said he believes is an enjoyable pet is a ferret.

Ludlow's ferret, Elizabeth, was a Christmas present and is now about six months old.

"Ferrets are good with enclosed rooms because they don't need too much room," he

Ferrets are classified by the housing department as caged animals, so they are allowed in the residence halls but they are playful and "are more enjoyable of a pet than most caged animals," Ludlow said.

Winning best remedy as K-State sweeps 2

Collegian Reporter

The only thing the K-State baseball team could do to forget the weekend debacle at Missouri was to play again.

And play again is what the Wildcats did Tuesday in a doubleheader against South Dakota State at Frank Myers Field.

K-State pummeled the Jackrabbits for 15-8 and 11-1 victories to raise its season record to 21-13 (21-9 non-conference).

Pitching has been the achilles heel of the Wildcats and it hurt again when the Jackrabbits jumped out to a quick 4-0 lead in the first two innings of the first game. After K-State's starting pitcher Tom Harvey struck out the leadoff batter, he issued a walk and served up a two-run homer to center fielder Galen Carver.

In the second inning, Harvey gave up another walk, a run-scoring triple and an RBI-single to fall behind by four.

THEN THE Wildcats began the furious comeback. After scoring one run in the second and one more in the third, K-State dropped a seven-run bomb on South Dakota State with seven hits in the inning (K-State had 15 hits in the game), featuring a two-run homer by Glynn Perry. The hit, a pop-fly to right field, was carried over the fence by strong winds which blew during both games.

The clout gave K-State a 5-4 lead, but the rally wasn't over. Antonio Triplett reached first on an error and stole second. Joe Goedert singled Triplett to third, who then scored on a single by Don Grause. Kent Schaede drove home Goedert with an out and Rob Golden doubled home Grause.

That hit signaled the end of Jackrabbit starter Dave Nicholson, who was relieved by Dave Nash. Brian Barlow greeted the new pitcher with a double, scoring Golden to give K-State a 9-4 lead.

DURING THE RALLY, Duane Harms was brought on in relief of Harvey to begin the third inning. Harms held South Dakota State scoreless until the fifth when the Jackrabbits pushed across four runs to draw within one, 9-8.

Wildness contributed to his downfall. Harms gave up a leadoff single to Carver and, after a force play at second base, issued three consecutive walks while throwing two wild pitches. He was pulled in favor of southpaw Greg Jones with only one out, the bases loaded and K-State leading 9-

Jones caught the first batter he faced on strikes but then walked two to force in two runs. He struck out the next batter on a pitch which got by Grause, allowing the final run to score. He struck out Carver to end the inning and allowed only one base runner in the final two innings to save the game for Harms, who is now 4-0.

K-State roughed up another Jackrabbit pitcher as it tacked on five runs in the fifth and one in the sixth.

The second game, which went only five innings because of the 10-run rule, was decided in the bottom of the second inning when the Wildcats poured across eight runs. K-State, which got only seven hits in the game, had four in the inning and capitalized on five walks by South Dakota State starter. Randy Nash and his successor Quincy Wildcat starting pitcher Bob Cutright raised his record to 3-0 by pitching three scoreless and hitless innings. Larry Spresser pitched the final two innings allowing one run on two hits.

Rally falls short against Shockers

By LINDA LUGINBILL Collegian Reporter

The K-State softball team split a doubleheader with the Wichita State Shockers Tuesday, winning the first game 7-0 and losing the second 10-7, to run its record to 5-7 for the season.

In the first game the 'Cats scored five of their seven runs in the third inning. Two of those runs came when freshman catcher Pam Rufener hit a home run with Leslie McGinnis on base.

It was McGinnis who scored next with a home run in the fifth to up the score to 6-0.

The 'Cats kept the Shockers scoreless again in the sixth and then in the bottom of the inning, with Lisa Packard on second base, Julie Laughery popped the ball just beyond first base, allowing Packard to score.

The Shockers were unable to score in the seventh, making Janel Anderson the winning pitcher and Gloria Baird the loser.

IN THE SECOND game the 'Cats put Wichita State down in order in the first inning and then scored a run in the bottom of the frame to take an early lead.

The Shockers came back in the second to tie the score at one and then in the third, with Cindy Farris as the new pitcher, they took a 3-1 lead over the 'Cats. They held this lead throughout the fourth inning and then in the fifth the Shockers broke lose.

The Shockers batted through their lineup and scored five runs before Wildcat coach Charlotte Michal replaced Farris with Sherrie Johnston.

Johnston allowed only two more runs before the 'Cats closed their half of the inning. But they couldn't get a rally going during their turn at bat and the inning closed with the score 10-1 in favor of the Shockers.

IN THE SIXTH the 'Cats didn't allow WSU to score and at their turn at bat the 'Cats came alive, scoring three runs in the inning.

Freshman Deb Burdiek started the 'Cats comeback by connecting with the ball and sending it to center field with McGinnis and Rufener on base. Both runners scored, bringing the score to 10-3.

Finding coaches Dickey's worry

Jim Dickey figured his biggest concern this spring would be shoring up a defensive line which lost three starters and improving a running game which was last in the Big 8 last year.

Bleacher bum

Those are still big worries for the K-State coach, but also at the top of his list of priorities is finding some coaches who can help in those areas.

coordinator Carl Selmer, backfield coach Jim Donnan, defensive line coach George Walstad and receiving coach Dennis Franchione-and its strength and conditioning coach-Bill Allerheiligen-within the last four months.

THAT'S QUITE A chunk to replace off an eight-man staff. But Dickey, whose team began spring drills Tuesday, doesn't foresee any problems filling the vacated positions.

"When they reduced the full-time coaching staffs to eight in major colleges three or four years ago, it left a lot of K-State lost four coaches-offensive capable people without jobs," he said.

"We've had a lot of applications and we think we'll be able to get everything squared

"We're still interviewing people and we'll try to get it done as quickly as we can."

When that will be, Dickey wouldn't say. K-State is required through affirmative action to advertise outside the area for 30 days. "We're well beyond that, but we'll keep it open for awhile longer to see what kind of names we might get," Dickey said.

A FEW NAMES BEING tossed around for the three jobs still open are men currently associated with K-State. Joe Hatcher, a part-time assistant last year and a former K-State quarterback, Don Bocchi, the school's academic counselor, and Russ Riederer, a former linebacker here, all have applied, Hatcher and Bocchi for coaching spots and Riederer for the strength and conditioning job.

"They'll definitely be considered, but it's still open to people outside the area," Dickey said.

Dickey has already replaced Selmer, who left to take the offensive line job for the

ROTTORMY

British Columbia Lions, with Jerry Boyce. And Walstad, who took the defensive line job at Wyoming, has been replaced with Dick Bumpas, leaving Dickey to find a backfield coach and a receiving coach.

Until he does, the Wildcats will be working with a short stick. Dickey, though, doesn't think it will prevent the team from accomplishing its goals-replacing the defensive line and finding some fast, swift running backs while evaluating personnal—during the spring.

In fact, while he wouldn't like to replace half his staff every year, he thinks the new faces might bring out the best in his players.

"In a lot of ways, the kids are going to have to prove themselves all over to the coaches," he said. "They're going to have to gain the new coaches' respect and viceversa."

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - Injury problems in the backcourt were plaguing the Kansas City Kings and Portland Trail Blazers on the eve of Wednesday night's opener in their best-of-three National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Kings, who needed a victory in Sunday's regular-season finale to make the playoffs, will be without playmaker Phil Ford and the Kings say it is "very unlikely" he will play at all in the series.

Blazer forward Kermit Washington calls Ford the best playmaking guard in the league and says the Kansas City inside game will be hurt without the point guard around to penetrate the Portland defense.

Ford is suffering from blurred vision after being poked in the eye in a Feb. 22 game against Golden State.

Portland, which won seven of its last eight games, had used its strength in the backcourt to finish third in the Pacific Division, but guards Jim Paxson and Billy Ray Bates were injured and couldn't practice Monday.

Paxson, the team's leading scorer at 17 points per game, reinjured his foot while walking across the practice floor Monday.

Blazer trainer Ron Culp said Paxson suffered a pinched nerve surrounding the joint behind his big toe. New x-rays showed the bone was not broken and there was no tendon or ligament damage.

"It's sore, and it's going to be sore for awhile...," Culp said, "but he should be Bates, the explosive scorer off the bench, injured his right knee early in the season finale against San Diego but went on to score 40 points in that game.

"It's not feeling well," Bates said as he sat while the other Blazers practiced. "It's sore. I think if I can stay off of it 'til tomorrow night I'll be able to help out."

Portland coach Jack Ramsay said he is hopeful that Paxson will be able to play Wednesday night and he feels Bates will be able to see action in the game.

Playmaking rookie Kelvin Ransey and second-year forward Calvin Natt also had been bothered by injuries, but both were expected to be back at full strength by Wednesday night.

KU's Woodard honored as top female athlete

NEW YORK (AP) — University of Kansas scoring star Lynette Woodard, honored Tuesday as the outstanding player in women's college basketball for the 1980-81 season, said that the women's game was not comparable to the men's in one respect— and she hoped to remedy that soon.

"The women's game is much like the men's," Woodard said after being named winner of the Wade Trophy. "The only thing missing is the dunk—and I don't think it will be long before someone gets it.

"I think one day I'll be able to get it," added the 6-0 Woodard, the all-time

NEW YORK (AP) — University of leading scorer in women's college ansas scoring star Lynette Woodard, basketball with a four-year total of 3,649 poored Tuesday as the outstanding points.

Woodard, the all-around leader of Kansas' Big 8 Conference champions who compiled a 27-5 season's record, said she has been training like a high jumper in an attempt to execute the dunk.

"I practice on a goal (basket) lower than 10 feet for technique purposes," she explained. "Hopefully, one day in a game, the adrenaline will really be flowing, I will take off and I will be able to get it down."

Woodard would like to make that historic dunk shot while playing in the Women's Basketball League (WBL). But with the WBL on shaky financial footing, it is uncertain whether she will get that opportunity there.

Asked about the WBL's future, Woodard, who will be eligible for the prodraft June 16, replied, "Deep down, I realize the league is having a hard time. But I really believe there are some dedicated people who can make it go."

If the WBL does not continue in operation, Woodard said an alternative would be playing with a team in Europe.

The Wade Trophy winner is decided in voting by coaches, sports information directors and sports writers.

Media emotions mixed in ruling to air finale

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The decision to play the NCAA basketball championship game as President Reagan lay wounded from an assassination attempt was blasted on some of the nation's sports pages Tuesday.

"It makes me want to cry," wrote Dave Kindred, a sports columnist for the Washington Post.

Meanwhile, other sports writers, fans and the two coaches involved in the title match defended the action.

"I think the kids felt as we all did about the tragedy, that both teams were here to play—nothing we could do," Indiana coach Bobby Knight said after the Hoosiers' 63-50 victory over North Carolina in Philadelphia Monday night.

North Carolina coach Dean Smith said the shooting was "a tragic thing, but we heard the president was in stable condition. There are a lot of tragic things all around, (the child murders in) Atlanta for example. Had he been near death, it would have been different."

NBC SAID PUBLIC response had been overwhelmingly in support of its decision to telecast the game.

Curt Block, director of press and publicity for the network, said the vast majority of telephone calls made Monday to the NBC switchboard favored going ahead with the game; 81 of the callers disagreed with the decision.

By the time the game started at 7:30 p.m. CST, Reagan had been removed from two hours of surgery and was reported in good condition. Block said that had the

The 'Cats held the Shockers again in the seventh and began to rally once more by scoring three runs before the inning closed. But the two late rallies weren't enough as WSU won the game 10-7.

Michal said WSU was just as tough a team as she thought it would be, but was glad that K-State at least split.

"I was hoping for two and if the second game had gone like the first we could have had it, too," she said. "We slacked off during the second game but I'm proud of the way they fought back and didn't give up."

The 'Cats travel to Concordia today to play Cloud County Community College in a doubleheader, and Michal said those games will be just as tough as the ones against Wichita.

Sports editor Bill Dwyre of the Milwaukee Journal compared the decision to play the contest with that of the National Football League to play its full slate of games the Sunday after President Kennedy was assassinated in November 1963.

"A cynic might bitterly suggest that if we stopped the world every time one of us got shot, we might never start at all... Had there been any question about the president's recovery, playing the game would have been obscene."

Senate approves bill to ban bottle rockets

TOPEKA (AP) - The Kansas Senate tentatively approved a bill Tuesday which would ban the use or sale of bottle rockets in the state beginning next year.

The measure, adopted on a standing 20-15, was one of 22 proposal to gain endorsement pending a final vote Wednesday.

Among those backed were bills to require the licensing of precious metal dealers, provide $10.8 million for capital improvments in state buildings during the next three years, and to prohibit the retail sale of metal beverage cans with detachable opening tabs.

The Senate, on final action, approved and sent to the House a measure requiring a 30year mandatory sentence for persons convicted of the most serious crimes. The proposal, adopted 35-2, raises the minimum time an inmate must serve before becoming eligible for parole from 15 years to 30 years for convictions of Class A felonies, which include first-degree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aircraft piracy and treason.

Passed, 22-16, was a bill which mandates parents to use car safety seats for their children two years or younger. The bill applies only to Kansas residents, requires the restraining devices only in the front seat of a vehicle and permits law enforcment officers to issue only an oral warning to

Sen. Bill Morris, a Wichita Republican and a critic of the bill, labeled it a "toothless watchdog," and said it would only add to the burden on law enforcement agencies.

Republican Sen. Jim Allen, of Ottawa, warned that the measure foreshadowed greater governmental interference in family life.

"I can see, if this is the route we are taking, there could be future legislation taking the shovel out of the sandpile, the tire swing from the tree, the bike and trike off the sidewalks, and the tree house out of the three, and the pony out of the pasture," he said as an explanation of his vote.

Art focuses on reality confrontation

By LESLIE FROST Collegian Reporter

The confrontation between each person's inner world and the world around him, is the focus of many of his works, said Steven Derickson, artist and instructor at the University of Texas, in a presentation last night in Forum Hall.

Derickson's latest work, "Strangers on a Train," is currently on display in the Union Gallery.

The exhibit is composed of 10 components which attempt to tell a narrative, Derickson said. The project took two months to complete, he said.

The piece reflects Derickson's interest in crime. The components in the display that depict violence include the outline of a body, done in wood pieces, and a picture of a knife.

"Violence can be seen as the matrix between the public and private," Derickson

It is the point at which they collide. It is a way to deal with personal and political questions, he said.

ANOTHER COMPONENT of the exhibit is a "private alphabet," used to raise questions about ideology-personal and social. Derickson said he uses the "private alphabet" in many of his art pieces.

The "private alphabet" is models of letters from the English alphabet cut off by a horizon line, he said. Only the bottom half of the letters are represented. These parts of the letters symbolize the "emerging or submerging of the language of un-derstanding," Derickson said.

Human understanding through language either increasing or decreasing-emerging submerging-depending on each person's amount of optimism, he said.

IN MANY OF his earlier pieces Derickson dealt with political issues.

"I work from the assumption that art is political," he said. "I feel like I, as an artist, raise questions better than I provide an-

Derickson said he used to be active in leftist politics. At one time he was a member of the Communist Youth League, he said.

He said that he now considers himself in favor of "socialism with a human face." Derickson showed slides, divided into groups of similar works, of art pieces he has completed. In many of his earlier works, a wall was used to symbolize "impotence, inability to go further...beyond a certain point," he

"I really kind of overused that image," he

Another group of earlier works employed the use of a camouflage background.

"Camouflage has been very important to me," he said. "I'm interested in using camouflage as a military unit might-to hide something dangerous.'

HIS CURRENT WORK is his most mature, Derickson said. Grouped together. his current work is known as the "body pieces."

"I never think about beauty when I work." Derickson said. "I'm really much more interested in ugliness."

After the completion of a project he will develop ideas that were left out of the project, Derickson said.

It's my "way of brainstorming," he said. With the advent of his "body pieces" a threatening element began to enter his work, he said. He now plans to continue the series of "body pieces" by depicting specific

Horses rest on waterbed during long surgeries

Collegian Reporter

While waterbeds have been billed as a cure for sexual problems in humans, some members of the veterinary medical faculty are using them to ease the pain horses suffer after undergoing surgery.

The waterbed is used to relieve pressure points on a horse while he is on the surgical table, said Dr. J. Eugene Schneider, associate professor of surgery and medicine.

During surgery, the weight placed on the shoulder and hind-leg muscles can cause a limited blood flow to those areas if the surgical table is not padded, Schneider said.

As soon as the horse is off the table, the pressure is relieved and there is a massive engorgement of blood in these areas. Because the engorgement—called myositis-is painful for the horse, he will often refuse to put any weight on the limb.

IT TAKES varying lengths of time, depending on the amount of muscle involved, for the animal to put pressure on the limb. If large amounts of muscles are in-

Wichita chief places crime blame on system

WICHITA (AP) - Those looking for solutions to the 20 percent crime increase in Wichita last year need to look beyond the police department and at the rest of the justice system which is "insulated and protected," Police Chief Richard LaMunyon

"Police can't control crime by themselves. The police don't control the courts and the police don't control the penal system," LaMunyon said in a recent in-

"But all elements of the criminal justice system must be held accountable.'

Reacting to federal crime statistics showing the Wichita crime rate increased 20.4 percent in 1980, LaMunyon said he is tired of his officers getting the blame.

Statistics for 1980 show major crimes in Wichita climbed to 24,562 compared with 20,391 in 1979. While the number of murders remained the same at 32, all six of the other categories in the crime index showed increases. The largest jumps were in burglaries and larceny thefts. Burglaries increased from 5,148 to 6,504 and larceny thefts jumped from 12,560 to 14,953.

While the crime rate soared in Wichita, it dropped by 4.1 percent in Topeka to 9,594 from 10,008. The third major city in Kansas tabulated in the FBI report was Kansas City, Kan., which recorded an 8 percent increase, increasing from 16,199 to 17,495.

Nationally, cities in the same population category as Topeka and Kansas City showed an increase of 10 percent, while cities in Wichita's category recorded an average increase of 11 percent.

"You're not dealing with a new phenomena," he said "You're dealing with retreaded criminals. Ninety-nine out of 100 criminals don't even go to jail. They either aren't caught, aren't charged, aren't convicted, aren't sentenced to prison or aren't kept there."

be able to withstand any weight, Schneider

The vet clinic has been using waterbeds for about four years, Schneider said. Betweeen 800 and 900 horses have received operations on the waterbed.

"The waterbed has been very effective," he said. "Since we've used waterbeds we have had only one case of myositis."

The waterbed is used during long operations, he said. During short operations, inner tubes or a combination of inner tubes and foam rubber are used.

THE HORSE is anesthetized in the recovery room and then transported to the surgical suite. After he is placed on the table, two students turn the horse on his back by rotating his legs upward, Schneider

The empty waterbed is slid under the horse and filled with tepid water until the horse is floating, he said. After the operation, the bed is emptied and the horse is moved back to the recovery room.

Before and during the operation, the horse is manipulated by massaging the bed so his weight is evenly distributed, he said.

Slight movements of the water in the bed

By NATALIE BULLOCK volved, it could take days for the muscles to don't cause problems during the surgery, Schneider said. However, the horse can roll off the table because there is no way of anchoring the waterbed. This has been prevented by not tilting the table and by tying the horse's tail to a rope, then to a part of the table, he said.

> MANY TYPES of padding have been experimented with in trying to alleviate myositis. The waterbed was selected by the staff at the clinic through "trial and error," Schneider said.

> At one time, foam rubber was used, but was difficult to clean. Rubber inner tubes were used, but were difficult to maneuver once the horse was placed on them. Air mattresses were also tried. Cases of myositis eventually appeared in all three types of padding, Schneider said.

> The bed is designed and manufactured to support 1,200 pounds. It has heavy seams because there is no frame, he said. The bed has supported a 2,200-pound horse without breaking.

> One bed can be used many times if handled carefully, he said. Two beds have been broken in the past four years, one because the nozzle deteriorated through continual use. The other ripped at the seams.

Q: HOW WILL DOWNTOWN REDEVELOPMENT BE FINANCED?

ANSWER:

- 1. PRIVATE INVESTMENT
- 2. FEDERAL FUNDS
- 3. TAX INCREMENT
- 4. BENEFIT DISTRICTS

Investment Sources for Downtown Redevelopment Proposal

$35,000,000 - Forest City

Urban Development Action Gra
 Tax Increment Financing (TIF)

550.000 - City's share of street and drainage benefit district

140,000 — City's share of water benefit district 250,000 — Poyntz streetscape benefit district

$48,940,000 - Total Investment downtown

LET US EXPLAIN ...

1. PRIVATE INVESTMENT

The downtown area needs private investment to thrive. The city can only help in providing public services and facilities, not stores or shopping centers. But, since city services and co-operation are needed for any new development, the city can exercise some conrol over plans for a major project like a mall. In this case the city screened potential developers and chose Forest City Rental Properties, of Cleveland, as best qualified to build a mall in the downtown area. The city commission made that selection on the basis of the company's record of success in building and managing shopping centers, and on the company's ability to get financing for its projects. The company joins Manhattan community in a joint enterprise.

2. FEDERAL FUNDS

The UDAG is awarded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to redevelop urban areas. In order to receive a UDAG there must be private money committed to the project. The city plans to use the UDAG money to buy the land on which the mall will be built, to relocate businesses, and to clear the land. The application for the grant will be submitted in May of 1981.

3. TAX-INCREMENT

Tax-increment financing is a method of paying for improvements made by the city in a designated central business district. For downtown redevelopment the tax-increment area includes the site of the mall plus adjacent land. The specific boundaries of the designated area are set by the governing body after a public hearing. Taxes are determined by assessment of property within the designated area before redevelopment and after redevelopment. The increase in property tax revenue generated by the increased valua-tion of the property after redevelopment is the "tax-increment." Since the largest increase in taxes will be on the property where the mall itself will be built, Forest City will pay the largest share of the

4. BENEFIT DISTRICTS

The city and the developer will share the cost of certain improvements to streets, drainage, and water service as is common practice for any new development. The city's share is for improvements which benefit areas ouside the mall. This can be paid with city funds ordinarily used in this way, without any general tax increase. Another benefit district for Poyntz streetscape improvements would be the responsibility of property owners in the downtown area.

KEPCo bill gains tenative approval from Kansas House

TOPEKA (AP) - A once-controversial measure known as the KEPCo bill was tentatively approved today by the Kansas House without debate or even question.

It will be up for a final vote Wednesdsay. Passage would send the bill back to the Senate for consideration of changes made by the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee in an effort to reach a compromise between opposing viewpoints.

"I think it shows the committee did its work pretty well," said Rep. Robert Miller (R-Wellington). Miller is Energy and Natural Resources chairman, and presented the bill on the House floor for possible amendment and debate.

The bill originated at the request of Kansas Electric Power Cooperatives Inc., Topeka, after the Kansas Corporation Commission issued an order imposing conditions on the proposed sale of 17 percent ownership in the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant to KEPCo.

The electric cooperative group maintained that restrictions imposed by the Corporation Commission on the price KEPCo could pay had effectively blocked the proposed purchase.

As passed by the Senate, the bill would have taken away the authority of the Corporation Commission to regulate rural electric cooperatives.

The House committee amended the measure to maintain Corporation Commission regulation of electric cooperatives, while removing the price restrictions the agency had placed on the KEPCo purchase of the Wolf Creek interest.

Assets from Fraternity Co-op can't cover debts

By JILL MATUSZAK Feb. 16. Collegian Reporter

The liquidated assets of the Fraternity Co-op, Inc., an organization formed nearly a decade ago for greek houses to order food and supplies at discount rates, won't be enough to pay back debts owed to suppliers and deposits made by member houses.

The co-op announced its loss of profit and subsequent folding at a joint meeting of the Interfraternity (IFC) and Panhellenic councils

According to Meryl Wilson, a member of the co-op's board of directors, the co-op's assets were sold at an auction March 14, "but it isn't likely that the $59,000 in deposits will be paid back."

NOT ONLY will the deposits not be returned, but the $13,251.26 owed to suppliers will probably also remain unpaid, Wilson, a Manhattan attorney, said.

Wilson said the auction brought in $5,457.17. Riley County District Court will decide how this money, and the $2,618.79 remaining in the co-op's checking account, should be distributed.

Because the debts to the suppliers will have to be distributed on a prorated basis, Wilson said it is unlikely the organizations will get their deposits back.

When the co-op was formed almost 10 years ago, each fraternity or sorority that wanted to join put in a deposit, ranging from $1,600 to $4,400, to buy trucks and delivery supplies, Wilson said.

Wilson listed 18 fraternities and sororities that were members of the co-op at the time of liquidation.

However, some of the members had pulled out their support or had limited their participation by not ordering as much through the coop, because the quality of the service and food was beginning to decline, said Mike Goss, junior in economics and Delta Upsilon president.

"For the bigger houses, the money is a thing of the past, and won't affect them much," Goss said. "For the smaller houses, it's going to be harder."

THE DECLINING participation resulted in financial problems for the co-op, Wilson said.

"The more that we purchased, the bigger discount we got. When the volume was cut in half, the profits declined," he said.

Two other incidents may have contributed to the folding of the coop, Wilson said.

In late 1979, the co-op's manager, Neil Dalley, resigned.

Wilson said Dalley left the co-op through mutual agreement between himself and the board of directors.

Dalley still owes the co-op $1,464.03 plus 10 percent interest on a $2,164.03 promissory note signed in June 1979, because "he had been making some unauthorized charges and selling on credit which was unauthorized by the board of directors," Wilson said.

THE SECOND FACTOR, according to Wilson, was former IFC adviser Jerry Lilly's alleged misuse of IFC funds, which "resulted into his forced resignation," from IFC during the summer of 1979.

Lilly was one of the founders of the co-op and was serving as secretary-treasurer at the time he resigned from IFC. Because of that incident, the co-op's members were left with a certain mistrust of Lilly's role at the co-op, Wilson

After Lilly's IFC resignation, the co-op had an audit performed

Weber meat cooler fails

By KIM WOLFE Collegian Reporter

The failure of a refrigeration unit Wednesday in the Weber Hall meats lab caused damage to a research project for which the 10 bull carcasses contained inside were being used.

A loss of electricity caused the unit to reach a temperature above 70 degrees—more than 30 degrees higher than normal, according to Donald Kropf, professor of animal science and industry.

The power failure occurred after 9 p.m. Tuesday and was discovered early Wednesday morning during a routine check of the carcass temperatures, he said.

The carcasses were from bulls slaughtered Tuesday morning as part of an experiment to determine carcass quality of animals implanted with growth stimulants, Kropf said.

THE BREAKDOWN wiped out the available evidence for data concerning the tenderness and taste characteristics for the bulls, he said. Other data such as carcass grade, amounts of fat, bone and muscle, growth rate and effect on reproductive capacity remained unaffected by the incident.

"It does wipe out a really important part of this project," Kropf said. "There's no way we can replace these animals without doing the whole thing over again."

Because the temperature treatment of the carcasses was abnormally high, he said, its effect would be unknown on the tenderness and taste characteristics of the beef muscles.

"Our problem is that we can't sort out whether "e high temperatures or the fact that these bulls were implanted caused them to be more tender, if they are," Kropf said.

The principle of the project was to obtain information on carcass quality and eating characteristics of implanted and non-implanted animals, said Melvin Hunt, associate professor of animal science and industry.

He said a dollar loss is difficult to determine.

"It's hard to put dollars and cents on anything," Hunt said. "There's an investment of people, time, feed and animals."

THE PROJECT included four groups of bulls, two of which were implanted with growth stimulants every 60 or 90 days from birth until slaughter and two which were allowed to grow naturally, he said.

Kropf said the experiment had been in the planning stages for nearly two years.

He said the project would continue, but the results would not be as complete.

The power failure is not the first and is one of many problems that continue to plague the Department of Animal Science and Industry's meats facilities.

"The problem is that our refrigeration is unreliable at this point." Kropf said. "It takes a great deal of maintenance."

Both Kropf and Hunt said the University Facilities crews have responded quickly when notified of a breakdown and they had the refrigeration unit working before noon Wednesday.

But the problems persist. "They're just trying to put bandaids over gaping holes," Hunt said.

THERE ARE NO alarm systems on the unit to inform personnel of problems, Kropf said. And people can't stay at the facility twentyfour hours a day.

"If we are going to have a meaningful teaching and research program, the Weber Hall expansion and renovation is very important to us because one of the things we're going to do is get new refrigeration," he said.

November, the Last refrigeration unit failed causing loss of some meats for a groundbeef project, Kropf said.

In April 1980, a federal meat inspector from the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) identified and tagged areas of special concern and temporarily shut down Weber Hall's smoke room after it failed to meet USDA standards.

At the time University Facilties crews worked to "make significant progress" toward eliminating the problem areas, Kropf said last year, and the USDA approved continued use of the facilities by "temporarily accepting the facility and its improvements.

AT THE TIME of the closing, renovation of Weber Hall was a priority item on the University's capital improvement list, but failed to receive endorsement from the Board of Regents in its fiscal 1981 budget.

For fiscal 1982, the renovation again didn't make the regents' list.

Currently the renovation plans for Weber Hall are listed second on the College of Agriculture's list of priorities, according to John Dunbar, dean of agriculture. He said the Plant Science Phase II building is first on the list.

which "could not show that he had taken a penny," Wilson said. Nevertheless, the "mistrust was still there," he said.

However, Wilson said he believes the mistrust of Lilly's role in the co-op's loss, was completely unfounded.

"In my opinion," Wilson said, "when Jerry left, everything went to hell."

MAY LINE, manager of the co-op at the time it folded, and Rick Sackbauer, founding manager of the co-op, echoed Wilson's belief.

"I don't know if throwing darts at Jerry Lilly is throwing darts at the right person," Sackbauer said. "I knew that man as well as anyone did. He gave unselfishly. I can't say enough about the help and cooperation he gave to me."

Line said she was upset that students and housemothers of the member houses believed the rumors about Lilly.

However, according to Brad Burnett, former K-State student and former student board member of the co-op, the co-op's amount of the loss was surprising. In a telephone interview, Burnett said he became interested in the co-op's financial situation after a meeting in September 1979 with all the houses involved.

The members were told of the loss, but they still "wanted to continue to support the co-op," Wilson said.

Burnett said it was at that time that he went over the co-op's 1979 balance sheet. Burnett said he became concerned about some high figures in the records, but could find no proof of any mishandling of funds.

THE LOSS OF PROFITS has also been blamed on a lack of involvement by the board of directors, Sackbauer said. Sackbauer, who managed the co-op from 1972-1975, said he believed the directors were not as involved as they should have been.

"I don't believe the board of directors played the role that they should have," he said.

Nevertheless, Sackbauer said he believed the folding of the co-op could be used for an example of problems which could face organizations that do not have complete support and cooperation.

concern over the finances by students in member houses brought attention to the responsibilities of the co-op's board of directors. The co-op was established with 11 members on the board. Five were to be undergraduate representatives of member houses and six were to be "alumni or representative members of different members of the corporation."

Since the co-op's folding and subsequent liquidation, speculation and rumor among students and housemothers of the co-op's former member houses has sparked more interest in the reasons behind the co-op's profit loss.

After it folded, members of the co-op had been examining the possibility of getting their deposits back by challenging the bond on the co-op's secretary-treasurer, Goss said.

The co-op's by-laws state that the secretary-treasurer "shall give bond indemnifying the corporation against larcency, theft, embezzlement, forgery, misappropriation, wilful misapplicaton, or other act of fraud or dishonesty."

After Lilly resigned from being secretarytreasurer, Polly Green took over the position for a brief time. However, at the time the co-op folded, no one was secretarytreasurer.

THE STUDENTS considered challenging the bond, but Sackbauer advised them against it because they would only be "hurting themselves."

"For embezzlement, they would have to prove it (mismanagement)," Wilson said.

At this time, the board can only depend on the accuracy of the co-op's financial statements and audit reports to determine where the funds went, Wilson said. Wilson said if there was reason to believe the loss could be attributed to anything besides decreasing sales, the board would have reason to take a closer look at the books. At this time they have nothing to base a further investigation on, he said.

LINE, WHO was in charge of the co-op's books before she was appointed manager, said that if someone dug deep enough, they could probably find some discrepancy. She would not comment on whether she thought the co-op's loss was because of illegal procedures.

When First National Bank closed the coop's account, Line said she could not understand why the board of directors didn't transfer to another bank unless it was because the board didn't care to bother with the co-op anymore.

Line said she was so hurt by her eventual treatment by the board that she wanted to forget about everything. After 10 years of service, she said, "All I got was a kick in the butt."

Shuttle gets OK for April 10 launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle Columbia, poised on the launchpad and nearly ready to fly, was given final approval Wednesday to make its maiden voyage shortly after sunrise April 10.

Countdown for the first mission in the $8 billion program, beset by problems for 2½ years, will begin Sunday at 10:30 p.m. CST, acting NASA Administrator Alan Lovelace said after a flight review test Tuesday and Wednesday.

However, Lovelace, speaking at a news conference, said bad weather at the launch site or the landing runway at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. could put off the flight again.

The head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said he "didn't expect" the investigation into a fatal launchpad accident less than two weeks ago would delay liftoff.

Cmdr. John Young and pilot Robert Crippen are to be aboard the craft, flying it through 36 orbits of the earth over 54 hours, and guiding the reusable craft back from space onto a dry lake bed.

Casino fire injures 16, hundreds flee

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — A fire confined to a luxury suite on the fifth floor of Caesars Palace hotel-casino injured 16 people Wednesday and forced hundreds to flee the hotel's 12-story central tower, authorities said.

It was the third sizable fire hotel fire at the gambling resort city in less than five months.

Smoke poured from fifth floor windows, and breaking glass showered the ground as people raced out to the parking lot behind the luxury hotel after the fire broke out at 10:05 a.m.

Ironically, a convention of burglar, and fire alarm companies is being held at Caesars Palace this week.

Guests and employees later were allowed to return to all but the fifth floor of the hotel tower.

The cause of the fire that erupted in a five-room suite was not known immediately, said Clark County Fire Capt. Ralph Dinsman.

"We have 10 civilian injuries—most of these are minor—and six firefighters are injured. One is quite serious," Dinsman said.

Thai troops halt advance on Bangkok

BANGKOK, Thailand — Troops under the control of ousted Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda halted their advance toward Bangkok early Thursday, avoiding a battle with forces loyal to Gen. Sant Chitpatima, leader of a day-old coup against the Prem government, military sources said.

Prem and Sant, previously close friends, also remained in radio contact attempting to negotiate a peaceful end to the crisis, the sources said. There was indication the rivals were near agreement.

The 60-year-old Prem—a general who was both prime minister and army commander—earlier ordered the rebellious generals led by deputy army commander Sant to lay down their weapons by 10 p.m. Wednesday. Sant ignored the warning, saying he had "20 times" more troops than Prem and ordering them to "suppress drastically any threat of disorder."

Prem, who fled to an army base in northeast Thailand after the coup was announced at 2 a.m. Wednesday, dispatched at least 10 truckloads of troops still under his control toward the capital.

Farmers flood Topeka to urge parity

TOPEKA — Calling it a "novel approach" for bolstering the agricultural industry, a group of about 250 farmers flooded the Capitol Wednesday to urge approval of a bill setting a minimum price of Kansas wheat at 70 percent of parity.

"There is a double standard for Kansas farmers," said Leonard Cox, state spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement in Kansas. "It is okay to protect labor and industry with minimum wages, guaranteed profits and protective quotas, but not farm products."

Farm organizations have long asked the federal government for a floor on grain prices, but there has been no effort to persuade the states to take such action.

Cox told the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is considering the bill, that other states would follow Kansas—the nation's leading wheat producer—if it enacted the legislation.

"Dare we not begin the process of removing the chains of economic bondage here in Kansas? Other people in at least five wheat producing states have promised that if Kansas institutes this minimum pricing on wheat they will work to do likewise to protect their farmers' income," Cox said.

Weather

If the refrigeration unit in Weber Hall breaks down again today it could mean even more trouble meat stored within it. The forecast calls for it to be windy and warm with a high in upper 70s.

Scrapping the MX missile system

In a Friday interview with the Washington Post, President Reagan expressed his views about the controversial MX missile system. The system, which proposes to shuttle nuclear missiles around the Nevada and Utah desert in a strategic game of hideand-seek, has been heralded by Pentagon officials as a necessary measure for U.S. defense.

In the interview, Reagan expressed doubt about the need for the system. "It's so elaborate, so costly, and I'm not sure that it is necessary or would be effective...it doesn't make much sense to me."

Reagan's assessment of the missile system is accurate. In addition to the inevitable delays caused by environmentalist lawsuits, Reagan suggested that the enormous expense and complexity of the system make it unfeasible. Reagan's logic is a refreshing breath of common sense in the realm of defense spending. It is a clear sign that the pet projects of Pentagon officials won't go unchecked.

Since its conception, the MX system has been a bone of contention among military experts, politicians, and particularly citizens of Nevada and Utah. Pentagon proponents repeatedly stated that it would provide the U.S. with a desperately needed defense mechanism. Its apparent demise will undoubtedly spur discussion of alternative systems and programs.

Reagan's statement will surely encourage the residents of Nevada and Utah. It appears that they will no longer have to fight to stop construction of a multi-billion dollar nuclear white elephant.

Myth perpetuated

Editor

In my Tuesday morning class, a substitute professor for the class related the fact that after his wife married him she quit school. He went on to joke about women being in college only for their MRS. degree. I have no objection's to what this man's wife does, but I resent women being pictured as simple-minded creatures hiding behind a bush with a large butterfly net waiting for the next male to walk by so they can bag a husband. If women were so desperate to get married they would have married any plow handler at home and not bothered wasting $380.00 a semester in tuition.

The women that are in college are here because they want to be. If we get married along the way, it is because we love and respect our spouse, not because we need someone to leach off of.

People who joke about women being in college only to meet a husband are perpetuating an ignorant myth. I resent paying part of a professor's salary to have him ridicule me. I hope professors will remember they are representing the K-State teaching staff and respect the students they teach as intelligent human beings, whether they are men or women.

Gun control ineffective

Editor,

Kevin Haskin has been listening to Teddy Kennedy and the National Coalition to Ban Handguns too long. The 1979 FBI uniform crime report showed that cities and areas which have the most restrictive gun ordinances also have the highest percentage of violent crimes. St. Louis, the nation's most violent large city, requires police permission for the purchase of a handgun and prohibits carrying them either openly or concealed. Washington, D.C., has a total ban on handguns and still has a violent crime rate unmatched by any city its size with lenient gun laws. In fact, Washington's crime rate has increased since the ban on handguns was enacted.

Kevin Haskin states "until handgun control is established, America will remain a nation in fear of itself." There are absolutely no complete statistics to back up his statement. The criminal element has always had all of the firearms it desires. For example, private ownership of machine guns has been banned since the 1930's, but criminals are still in possession of machine guns.

When guns are outlawed, only the outlaws will be in possession of guns.

Vote for a change

I don't particularly like local elections, especially following the hoopla of national elections. The local frivolities just can't compare with what occurs on the national level.

But this year's City Commission elections are providing a longneeded service—robust public debate over downtown redevelopment.

Throughout the past 10 years the concept of turning downtown Manhattan into an indoor shopping mall has made headlines in the local newspapers, although it wasn't seriously pursued until two years ago

But during that time there has been little debate on the issue. The city would release information about progress toward developing a mall and it would be printed. The press has made a minimal effort to explain the benefits, as well as the problems a mall would create. And, of course, the city has only told Manhattan what "wonders" a mall would bring to residents.

DOES MANHATTAN even want a mall? Nobody knows because no one has made the effort to find out. Sure, the Manhattan Mercury has done an opinion poll on the subject. But because of the way their polls are conducted who knows whether it was children or adults responding to the poll?

Wanda Fateley, the only incumbent commissioner to run for re-election, has stated that the reason Manhattan is pursuing construction of a mall is to preserve the town as a major shopping center.

Come on now. Manhattan is not a major shopping area. Businesses come an go here every year. If Manhattan was a major shopping center, fewer businesses would be failing each year.

IN ADDITION, if Manhattan is such a big shopping center, then why do half the shoppers go out of town to Topeka or Kansas City?

Manhattan already has too many stores, not enough selection and high prices. A downtown mall would not solve those problems.

Adding to these problems is the complex area of funding and construction.

The federal government is becoming tight-fisted. The state government is following suit, and now the city maintains that a southern arterial would have to be built for the mall. Where is the money come from if not from a budget-minded government? Would the residents support a mall referendum?

Let's suppose that a mall is constructed. In five years or so the mall would be obsolete without careful construction considerations.

MANY OF the malls built during the past 10 years are now considered outdated. The function of malls has changed and the intentions of their patrons have altered considerably. Between Fort Riley, Junction City and Manhattan, there is little question whether shoppers could support the mall. But national surveys indicate that shoppers are going to malls less often. In addition, they aren't always going to shop.

When people go to malls today they expect to be entertained, even if they don't buy anything.

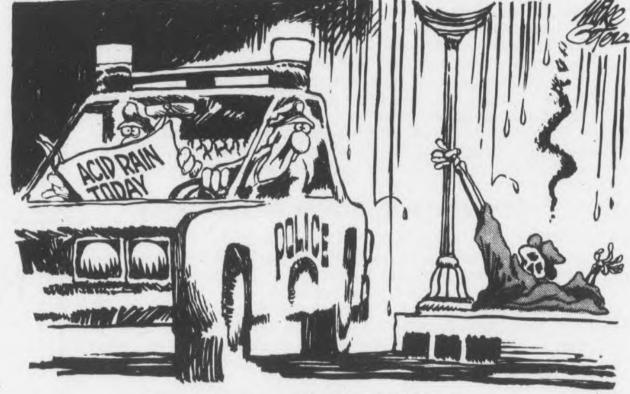

Thus malls have become centers for the film industry to display its achievements, and the focus of concerts by orchestras, jazz groups and other musical talents. Such extravaganzas are not just a welcome sight to shoppers. They now expect such displays when they enter a mall. And while orchestras certainly attract potential shoppers, they are just potential shoppers with less and less money as inflation continues to strip the family budget of spending money.

Now under attack by candidates for City Commission, attempts are being made to justify investing space, time and money into a mall.

The public should be wary of advertising measures to push the

There are alternatives to improving the downtown area other than building a mall—alternatives which should be explored before entering into such a massive project.

Come election day, consider the implications of a mall and vote for a change in downtown redevelopment direction.

Housing Council OKs problem student policy

Collegian Reporter

A procedure to deal with problem students in residence halls, and the temporary housing program in Jardine Terrace were the two main items discussed Wednesday at the Housing Council meeting.

"Each year in residence halls, some people are less than desirable residents," Thomas Frith, director of housing, said.

In the past, some problems with residents, have resulted in judicial action of im-mediate removal of the student from the residence hall, he said.

FRITH INTRODUCED a procedure that, instead of terminating the student's contract in the middle of the school year, would allow the student to remain until the end of the year, and the hall director and floor staff member would then decide to deny renewal of the contract if necessary.

The Housing Council voted to accept the procedure and it became effective immediately.

Students who have caused problems in a hall will be given notice prior to their departure that they won't be permitted to return to the halls. If they have submitted a conditional contract for the next year, it will be returned without a financial penalty.

If a student's contract isn't renewed, he can have his case reviewed by the director and the staff of the hall where he lives. Appeals must be made within one week after he has received his notice.

Crime crackdown begins in Salina

SALINA (AP) - The arrest of nine people in an undercover drug operation is just the start of a crackdown on crime in the Salina area, Police Chief John Woody said Wednesday.

The drug arrests late Tuesday and Wednesday culminated a six-month undercover investigation by the Kansas Bureau of Investigaton. Nine people in their 20s were arrested on charges of sale or possession of cocaine, marijuana and LSD. Two others were being sought.

Eight of the arrests were made in Saline County and one in adjoining McPherson County.

The raid started Tuesday when an undercover agent equipped with a radio transmitter purchased cocaine from a young woman in a Salina motorcycle shop. Officers arrested the woman, then spread out to make other arrests in the area.

Terrace which has allowed students to stay in Jardine for $2.50 per night, Bob Felde, family housing coordinator, said.

Eighteen students have participated in this temporary living arrangement and each has moved into other living arrangements such as apartments and residence halls as soon as they became available, Felde said.

This housing arrangement will continue next fall, he said. Previously, the students temporarily living in Jardine were under contract to move into the residence halls as space became available. "We housed 150 students this way," Felde said.

The students this semester have no obligation to move into the halls.

ANOTHER ITEM discussed during the meeting was the suggested housing rate for

A charge of $1,560 for students living in residence halls during the school year 1981-82 has been approved, Frith said. The cost this year was $1,450, he said.

The new rate will provide the residence halls with a budget of $8.7 million. The budget for the 1982-83 school year is being projected at $9.5 million, he said.

Frith also discussed residence hall reservations for the coming year.

The total hall applications for next fall as of Friday were 3,289, which is 409 more than at the same time last year, Frith said. The total contracts as of Friday were 2,412, which is 670 ahead of last year.

"These numbers have been running consistently higher," but should begin tapering off, Frith said.

THE POSSIBILITY of a helicopter rescue system for residence halls in the case of fire is being investigated, Frith said. There is concern for the students in the nine-story residence halls where fire equipment can only reach the sixth floor.

"It will take awhile for people to approve and develop a plan for this," Frith said.

The helicopter approach is a "just-in-case type of thing," said Chet Peters, vice president of student affairs and chairman of the Housing Council.

During the council meeting, Jean Riggs, director of Food Service, said two dietician applications for next fall have been sub-

"We will be fortunate to get 10 applications," Riggs said.

There will be one or two positions open,

Starting next fall, some major equipment changes will be made in residence halls, Riggs said.

This summer, there will be major remodeling in Kramer Food Center, she said. The walk-in refigerator will be replaced and the incinerator will be torn out.

Irish student team to face K-Staters in debate tonight

Collegian Reporter A public debate will pit Irish debaters against K-State debaters tonight at 7 in the Union Little Theatre.

Three members of the Irish National Debate Team have been on a tour in the United States and have debated at several different universities. This is the first international debate to be held at K-State in more than 10 years, Ed Schiappa, K-State debate coach, said.

The primary benefit of the international debates is to expose members on both teams to a different style of debating, he said. By meeting students from another country, the students also are able to broaden their cultural knowledge.

THE PROGRAM also serves to publicize the debate program at K-State, Schiappa said.

"K-State does exist and does something other than play basketball," he said. "It will increase the propensity of our academic program."

Schiappa and Chris Wheatley, junior in speech and member of the varsity debate squad, will argue for the affirmative against the Irish debaters. The topic of the debate will be "Resolved:

is a more important goal than the satisfaction of American energy demands." Schiappa, rather than another student, is debating because the Irish debaters are graduate students and law students. "I'm a graduate student and it's appropriate for me to debate to match their experience," Schiappa said. THERE IS a difference between the Irish and the American styles of debating; the Irish style is based on rhetorical persuasiveness, he said.

By TANYA BRANSON research, and the way one delivers is not as important. Sometimes it becomes a contest of who can talk faster and tell more facts."

Other than having thoroughly researched the topic, the K-State debaters can't do much to prepare for this style of debate.

"This is more extemporaneous," Wheatley said. "It is an appeal to the audience, more humor and off-the-cuff things. In a regular debate, things are scripted out and prepared in advance.

"We will have to read audience feedback and try to adapt to the audience," he said.

AT THE BEGINNING of the debate, the members of the audience will be given a ballot and asked to describe their beliefs about the topic. After the debate, they will add any comments to the ballot, which helps the debaters measure how successful they were in persuading the audience, Wheatley

There will be a reception for the public to meet the Irish debaters after the debate in the Union Sunflower Room.

The debate is being sponsored by K-State and the Adolf Coors Company.

The international debate program was organized by Gary Holbrook, a professor at Metro State College in Denver, who asked Coors to sponsor the Irish debate team, Schiappa said. This is the second year for the international debate program.

Hospital might release Reagan early next week, sources say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite some pain, a high-spirited President Reagan got out of bed and set to work in his hospital suite Wednesday as aides indicated he may be released by early next week—and make a major trip before the month is out.

White House physician Daniel Ruge declared late in the day that "The president continues to make excellent progress toward full recovery" from the bullet wound which punctured his left lung in Monday's assassination attempt.

"He has experienced some pain, which is normal for...an injury and surgery of this type. He is now resting comfortably," Ruge said.

Earlier, Vice President George Bush said after a visit that "The president is doing so well...it's really amazing."

MEANWHILE, JAMES BRADY, the presidential press secretary shot in the brain during the assassination attempt, was making a "truly exceptional" recovery and may regain more mental functions than had been hoped, brain specialists said. He remained in critical condition and his doctors said they were "cautiously optimistic."

As for the shooting itself, sources who declined to be identified say investigators now believe that Reagan was hit by a ricochet from one of the six bullets fired instead of being struck directly.

Two bullets hit Reagan's limousine and the investigators say the president was probably hit by the bullet which struck the rear door. The investigators found miscroscopic traces of paint on the bullet removed from Reagan and the entry wound was more ragged than it would have been had he been struck directly, the sources explained.

REAGAN WAS MOVED into a private room in a surgical ward and a "full-time office" was set up nearby for staff members, according to presidential counselor Edwin Meese III. Meese said the president may be sent home from the George Washington University Hospital early next week.

White House chief of staff James Baker III and his deputy, Michael Deaver, who with Meese make up the triumvirate that directs the White House and administration operations, spent about 10 minutes with the president shortly after 7 a.m. At that time, the president signed an executive order granting lower import tariffs for products from developing nations.

DEPUTY WHITE HOUSE press secretary Larry Speakes said plans were going ahead for a Reagan meeting scheduled for April 27 and 28 in San Diego, Calif., with Mexican President Jose Lopez-Portillo. The trip may include a stop across the border in Tijuana.

The White House took over "virtually a whole corridor" at the hospital, Speakes said. All told, 11 rooms were set aside for White House use.

The president was assigned a room, 11feet, 4-inches by 16-feet, 7-inches that included a wall-mounted television, two blue easy chairs and a rust-colored couch.

The daily cost is $234, Speakes said, adding that he assumed that the president's State of California insurance policy, in effect since Reagan's days as the state's governor, would pay for it.

DOWNTOWN REDEVELOPMENT—WHY DO WE NEED IT?

Some Facts About "The Mall"

1. Contrary to what you may have heard . .

- Citizen involvement in downtown redevelopment plans has been greater than in any issue ever considered by City Commission. There have been many public meetings over the past 4 years, with hundreds participating.
- The proposed downtown mall will NOT call for an increase in our property tax rate.
- The City will NOT build or own a mall. A private developer will make that investment.
- The project will NOT be started until all funding is secured. There is no danger of committing ourselves to something we cannot complete.
- Businesses will NOT be asked to move until relocation expense assistance funds are available.
- Leaving downtown as it is is NOT an alternative. It is declining, and would not survive a competing outlying mall. Nice facades and benches are not enough.
- The proposed mall east of 3rd Street will reinforce, NOT replace, downtown. All the area will remain diversified and in the hands of private businesses.

- Downtown redevelopment will cost the City less in city services than would an outlying mall. We will have one or the other. Developers are waiting for us to decide.
- 2. The downtown mall IS cost-effective
- A private developer (Forest City, Inc.) will assume ALL costs of developing the mall, including any cost overruns.
- The UDAG grant is federal money already collected. It will go elsewhere if it does not come to Manhattan. Our chances for a UDAG grant are good. An outlying mall—the only realistic alternative—would cost us MORE, in roads, water, fire & police protection.
- It is more cost-effective to capitalize on an existing resource—our downtown—than to sacrifice it to a new shopping area. We can have only one or the other. Not both.
- The market demands a regional shopping mall here, somewhere. The developers are waiting for us to decide.
- Downtown is already declining. It can't stay as it is. We must either redevelop it or lose to suburban sprawl.

- 3. The downtown mall will provide:
 - a regional shopping center with a large selection of merchandise at competitive prices
 - thousands of dollars annually in additional tax receipts
 - stabilized downtown property values to ensure that all taxpayers pay only their fair share
 - * free parking near a variety of stores
 - * up to 1200 new jobs
 - * the re-use of existing city services & utilities, costing LESS than in an outlying mall
- preservation of historic buildings
- a strong & diversified downtown combining existing and new stores, local & national merchandising
- improved shopping convenient to city's residents
- * reinforcement of local businesses now located downtown, who would be forced to follow the major department stores if an outlying mall was developed instead.

We are talking about a regional shopping center, a vastly improved place to shop, able to supply the needs of people of Manhattan and our whole trade territory. A cosmetic-type fix-up is not a regional shopping center.

Consider the Facts about Downtown. We invite you to vote for people who support the Downtown Mall concept.

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Hinckley Jr., his alleged murder attempt upon President Reagan reportedly spawned by infatuation with a teen-age film star, underwent psychiatric tests Wednesday over the objections of his new attorney, a partner of famed criminal lawyer Edward Bennett Williams.

The mental tests were conducted at the Quantico, Va., Marine base south of the capital, where Hinckley, 25, has been kept isolated and under constant surveillance since his arrest Monday following the attempted assassination.

The tests were administered to determine whether Hinckley, the son of a wealthy Denver oilman, is mentally competent to face trial on charges of attempted murder of the president and assault on a Secret Service agent.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT sources say investigators believe Hinckley was "infatuated" with teenage movie actress Jodie Foster and wanted to do something that would attract her attention.

The sources said Hinckley wrote an unmailed letter to Foster in which he described his plans to shoot the president and said "I'm going to do it for you." The letter was found by authorities, apparently at the downtown Washington hotel where Hinckley stayed the night before the attempt on Reagan's life.

Foster had portrayed a teen-age prostitute in the film "Taxi Driver," in which a New York cab driver who is fascinated by guns plans to assassinate a Senate candidate.

Meanwhile, a switch in defense strategy developed Wednesday when one of Hinckley's new lawyers, Vincent Fuller, sought at a court hearing Wednesday to cancel the psychiatric tests.

However, U.S. Magistrate Arthur Burnett rejected the request.

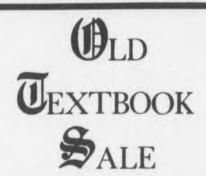

HINKLEY'S ORIGINAL defense attorneys, who were appointed by the court, had asked for the mental tests. Fuller gave no explanation for why he opposed testing of Hinckley, who has been under psychiatric care in the past.

Thomas Decair, a Justice Department spokesman, said Hinckley was interviewed for three hours by a psychiatrist. Decair emphasized the session was not to determine Hinckley's sanity, but rather whether he is competent to understand his rights and help in his defense.

Fuller, a partner in the firm of Williams and Connolly, also told the magistrate that his client was willing to waive a preliminary hearing scheduled for this morning and

Track, not books, comes first for 'Cats' English track star

Collegian Reporter Kim Hagger isn't attending K-State for an education.

"I'm not here to come to school," the freshman from Chigwell, England said. "I'm here to run track."

And running track for K-State is precisely what Hagger has been doing. Since arriving Jan. 20, she's been devoting her time outside class to the sport, traveling every weekend since she came. Hagger says she won't have one free weekend until she goes home, where she'll compete for the British national team until she returns to the states in September.

HAGGER MADE IT to K-State after meeting men's trackster Vince Parrette. who was in London last summer touring with his jazz band. Parrette asked Hagger to list her accomplishments and took them back to women's coach Barry Anderson. Anderson immediately wrote Hagger, offering her a scholarship and convincing her to come to K-State.

"I don't know how they found out, but after receiving the letter from Anderson, I immediately had offers from San Diego, Utah and Kentucky," Hagger said. "But I accepted this right away."

As a pentathlete, who does five events (hurdles, high jump, long jump, shot put and 800-meter run), Hagger has been competing in an average of four events a meet.

"In some meets I found myself in three events at one time—changing shoes and running between events," Hagger said. "They don't organize the events so we can do them one at a time."

BESIDES THE FIVE events she's already involved in, Hagger will soon be adding the javelin and 200-meter run to make the pentathlon a heptathlon. It will become a worldwide event this summer and will be included in the 1984 Olympics.

Working for the British record in the heptathlon and competing on the 1984 British Olympic team are some of Hagger's goals.

Hagger said many people here think she should gain residency and compete for the United States in the Olympics since she's on scholarship here. But she said she believes she's doing her running for K-State and wants to go back to England to compete.

One reason she's here is that England doesn't provide scholarships to athletes who also want to go to school.

"They feel anyone that is so interested in a sport shouldn't continue her education anyway," Hagger said. "Only a few graduating from high school go to college. The entrance exams are really

SINCE ARRIVING at K-State, Hagger has set two personal bests. She's now down to a 14.17 time in the hurdles; her previous best was 14.50 in England, The other event best for her came in the shot put, where she has improved two feet to

"In England, they're surprised I'm doing so well," she said.

Hagger attributes the improvement to having an indoor facility in which to practice in the winter. In England there is only one such facility for the British team. As a result, practice usually doesn't start until April, and the season extends through September.

"Through practicing here I've progressed every week," Hagger said. "I've got people to work with, which is good. And I can also see my coach every day. There I always trained on my own.'

HAGGER SAID her father, also involved in athletics when he was younger, encouraged her to attend K-State after the offer was made.

According to Hagger, the hardest thing about coming to the states was "I was happy where I was, happy with my job and the friends I had. It took me about a month to settle down."

The 19-year-old athlete said she wouldn't have gone to college at all if she hadn't come to K-State. Working in a London bank since she was 17, Hagger had advanced to assistant supervisor in the head office.

Errors aid, doom softball team

Getting help from some shoddy fielding, the K-State softball team rolled to a 12-5 win over Cloud County Community College Wednesday in the second game of a doubleheader in Concordia.

In the first game, poor fielding doomed the Wildcats. Cloud County rallied for two runs in the bottom of the seventh inning to take a 4-3 win.

Leading 3-2 and needing only three outs to gain the win, K-State let Cloud County off the hook. The winners got a hit to lead off the inning, and then K-State first baseman Leslie McGinnes made an error, putting runners on first and second.

Cloud County then pulled off a double steal, and the tying run scored on a bunt single. After an out, Cloud County scored the winning run on a single to left field.

K-State scored all three of its runs in the second. Chris Williams got two runs batted in on a double to left, scoring Pat Howard, who had singled, and Janel Anderson, who had reached on an error by the shortstop. Lisa Packard brought home Williams with a single to left.

In the second game, K-State jumped on Cloud County from the start, scoring seven runs in the first despite getting only three hits. Four of the runs were unearned as the Wildcats, who sent 10 batters to the plate in the frame, were benefited by four errors.

The big hit in the inning was Cindy Farris's two-run double. Farris also was the winning pitcher, going the distance while allowing seven hits.

The Wildcats added two runs in the third on Pat Howard's two-run homer and three more in the fifth. The big hit in the fifth was a double by Williams.

Cloud County scored a run in the first, three in the fifth and another in the seventh to account for its total.

"We did pretty well," K-State coach Charlotte Michal said. "We would have won both of them if we hadn't made those errors in the seventh inning of the first game. It was as simple as that.'

Now 6-8, the women will travel to Springfield, Mo., this weekend for the Southwest Missouri State tournament.

Royals, Angels, A's expected to rule West

Baseball's best hitter lives in the American League's West Division, but baseball's best teams don't.

The hitter is Kansas City's George Brett, who flirted with the first .400 season in 39 years last year and finished just short of the target at .390.

Brett's Royals have won the division four of the last five years and they'll battle California and Oakland for it this season. The have-nots who will chase them-Minnesota, Chicago, Seattle and Texas-have no real standouts.

BRETT, WHO HIT 24 homers and drove in 118 runs last season, has plenty of punch surrounding him: Willie Aikens, .278 average, 20 homers and 98 RBI; Willie Wilson, .326, 79 steals; Amos Otis, .251, 10-53; Clint Hurdle, .294, 10-60; and Hal McRae, .297, 14-83. The departure of catcher Darrell Porter could be a problem, but manager Jim Frey believes John Wathan, .305, 6-58, can be an adequate replacement.

The pitching seems solid with Dennis Leonard, 20-11, Larry Gura, 18-10, and Paul Splittorff, 14-11, as the main starters and Dan Quisenberry, 12-7 with 33 saves, as the boss of the bullpen.

If Brett isn't baseball's best hitter. California's Rod Carew is. Carew is a seventime batting champion and his .331 average last season was largely overshadowed by Brett's brilliance.

CAREW HEADLINES an intriguing Angel lineup which could make things interesting in the West if everybody stays healthy. California did some player shuf-fling, most of it with Boston, hoping to regain the division crown it won in 1979. The

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS Angels' most important newcomers, all acquired from the Red Sox, are Fred Lynn, .301, 12-61; Rick Burleson, .278, 8-51; and Butch Hobson, .228, 11-39.

They join Carew, Bobby Grich, .271, 14-62; 1979 MVP Don Baylor; Dan Ford; and Brian Downing. Baylor, Ford and Downing were hampered by serious injuries which torpedoed last season for California.

THE ANGEL PITCHING is spotty. They signed free agents Geoff Zahn, 14-18 at Minnesota, Bill Travers, 12-6 at Milwaukee, John D'Acquisto, 2-5 at San Diego and Montreal, and Jesse Jefferson, 5-13 at Toronto and Pittsburgh. Holdovers include Don Aase, 8-13, Dave Frost, 4-8, Fred Martinez, 7-9, and relievers Andy Hassler, 5-1 with 10 saves, and Dave LaRoche, 3-5 with Oakland trumpets Billy Ball, a fundamentals approach named for the A's fiery manager, Billy Martin. He manufactured a second-place finish last year and is shooting for the top this time. If he gets there, it will be on the fleet feet of Rickey Henderson, .303, who stole 100 bases last season, and the powerful right arm of Cy Young runner-up Mike Norris, 22-9.

The main cogs in the A's offense are: Dave Revering, .290, 15-62; Tony Armas, .279, 35-109; Wayne Gross, .281, 14-61; and Dwayne Murphy, .274, 13-68. Henderson, Rick Langford, 19-12, Matt Keough, 16-13, and Steve McCatty, 14-14, are the important arms behind Norris.

Senate committee kills severance tax issue

TOPEKA (AP) - Gov. John Carlin's severance tax proposal, which faced long odds from the day he offered it nearly three months ago, sustained what appeared to be a mortal blow Wednesday.

Despite brave talk from some of Carlin's spokesmen, those who assessed the situation more realistically generally agreed the issue is dead in this session.

Some severance supporters said they were content to let it die for this year and come back with it stronger than ever in 1982-when the projected increase in property taxes for schools will be much greater, putting more pressure on the Legislature to come up with new revenue to ease the property tax load.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee Wednesday killed the severance tax bill, which had passed the House March 9, by a 6-5 vote.

The committee repulsed one attempt to kill it, then amended the bill to remove provisions for distributing the revenue the severance tax would raise.

A SECOND MOTION by Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains) to report the bill unfavorably carried by the same 6-5 tally.

It means the measure cannot be debated unless two-thirds of the senators voted to place it on the debate calendar in spite of the committee's action.

Prospects for resurrecting the bill were slim in the committee, and there also was doubt whether attempts could be made to amend provisions of the bill into some other measure on the floor of the Senate, or in the House if a Senate effort failed.

Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City) said he will try to amend the severance tax provisions into some other bill up for Senate debate if the right vehicle can be spotted.

HOWEVER, HIS administrative assistant, Richard Larimore, admitted it is going to be difficult, because of the constitutional prohibition about a bill containing more than one subject and the certainty that the oil and gas industry will challenge any bill passed in court.

Attorney General Robert Stephan said Wednesday he thinks the bill would have been unconstitutional anyway, because of the distribution amendments which injected a second subject into it.

House Speaker Wendell Lady (R-Overland Park) said he is discouraging talk in the House of amending the severance tax provisions into some other Senate bill up for debate in the lower chamber.

"Frankly, I would consider it dead this session," said Lady, who helped Carlin get the severance tax bill through the House.

"There's no reason to subject the House members to that kind of pressure if there's no indication the Senate will accept it," added Lady. "Frankly, I think the climate is going to be much better next year."

ONE OF THE bill's strongest foes, Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta) said, "I would assume that it's all over. I think it's probably had it last gasp in Kansas. That tax was a bad tax, and I don't care what anybody says.'

However, some of Carlin's spokesmen were not so sure.

"We've got at least a couple of downs left," said Bill Hoch, Carlin's press secretary.

"The issue of a severance tax is not dead now, nor will it be in the immediate future or the long term," Hoch declared."

Chaney said, "I'll just try to get them to consider what they're doing. It's just more evidence of the continued rape of the Kansas taxpayer. I noticed the chief spokesman for the oil and gas industry said they would rather have tax increases placed on farmers and home owners than on their industry."

Chaney referred to testimony by Don Schnacke, executive vice president of Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association just before the committee took

USSA meeting to promote unity

SGA Editor

The United States Student Association (USSA) national lobby conference in Washington, D.C. will probably be a historical occasion, according to Doug Tuthill, national chairman of USSA.

"There's quite a large debate going on around the country on how to organize a large group of students," Tuthill said.

This will be the first time to bring national student groups together to endorse USSA's efforts, Tuthill added.

Tuthill came to K-State's campus Wednesday with Bob Bingaman, executive director of the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK), to discuss what USSA is about, its lobbying tactics and purposes. He talked with the two recently selected delegates who will represent K-State in Washington and Angela Scanlan, student body president.

David Lehman, junior in agricultural economics and David Sandritter, freshman in finance, are the K-State delegates who will attend the conference April 10-14.

THERE WILL be "all kinds of proposals thrown out," according to Tuthill. USSA is proposing a National Student Organization

By DIANE DOCTOR Committee that would join student groups on the campus, state and national level

A major press conference will be on April 13 in Washington, announcing National Student Action Day to be held April 23. Washington lobbyists will demonstrate their support for education, Tuthill said, asking students throughout the United States to write letters, make phone calls, and issue petitions to their senators and represen-

"We want to make everyone feel that there is a student unity," Tuthill said.

"One of the challenges we have with students is to be able to bring students together from all over the country in unison," Tuthill said. "I think there's a real honest attempt to make USSA a broad-base system all over the country."

K-STATE IS CURRENTLY on a ninemonth trial membership of USSA. The organization claims to represent the student population of the nation-11 million students-although every campus is not a paying member of the organization. At the end of K-State's trial period, Student Senate will vote whether to become a full member of the organization, paying the $250 annual Scanlan addressed the national basis of USSA as opposed to ASK membership which provides lobbying efforts on the state level.

"There's such a difference between New York, California and Kansas students," Scanlan said."

"The struggle here at K-State is pretty well talked about all over the country, Tuthill said. "There is a desire to bring the students in New York City together with the students here in Manhattan, Kan."

WITH THE UNIVERSITY considering USSA membership, Scanlan asked Tuthill "how to organize and motivate students as far as USSA is concerned."

"It's been a real struggle to get K-State in USSA," Scanlan said.

Tuthill told Scanlan, "The same fights that you're fighting here on campus and in Topeka-it's the same in Washington, D.C."

Financial aid is an important issue with USSA and one of concern at K-State, Tuthill said. Everyone is affected by the budgetry process in Washington and the students receiving financial aid on this campus should become involved with the issue.

Tuthill told the two Washington delegates to get personal testimonies from K-State students who will be affected by cuts in financial aid and take the testimonies to Washington.

"What these cuts will mean at K-State, that type of information will be very effective," Tuthill said.

"How much potential for effect do students have (in Washington)?" Sandritter asked Tuthill.

"The reason I'm out here in Kansas is, I think it's clear there is only a limited impact," Tuthill said.

"I can talk to Sen. (Robert) Dole 'till I'm blue in the face. One word from you or Angela can be far more effective than anything I can say."

SCANLAN SAID the biggest problem at K-State is organizing and disseminating the information on current issues to students, which makes it hard to show need for USSA membership.

"So many students don't know that we're going to have a fee increase next year, that there are cuts in financial aid," Scanlan Tuthill said he was frustrated as student body president of the University of Florida. when students didn't have control of the student activity fee.

There is a need for structural power in the education process, Tuthill said. "I have ideas way down the line about unionization for USSA."

"What I'm talking about is getting student government power from the students, not the administration."

Scanlan questioned the overall effect of unionization but did agree that equal power of students and faculty would make it easier to resolve conflicts.

"We have a real good relationship with the administration;" Scanlan said."Our problem is with faculty a lot of times." The other day a faculty member said "The faculty are the University.' That was a slap

K-State gives USSA trial run

By MARY REALS Collegian Reporter K-State is the last of the Board of Regents schools to join the United States Student Association (USSA), a national lobbying "This is a new organization for K-State and was voted on by Student Senate sometime last fall to try it on a nine-month trial basis," said Mike Anderson, USSA campus director for K-State.

"USSA is made up of colleges across the country who pay a membership fee to be in it," Anderson said.

Before K-State began the trial, all other Board of Regent schools were members of USSA, according to Steve Linenberger, campus director for the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK).

ALTHOUGH K-STATE belongs to ASK, which lobbies on the state level, Linenberger said he sees the need for both organizations. "Student concerns go beyond Topeka," Linenberger said, "and a lot of student issues are dealt with on a national level."

Linenberger said the organization could be helpful to K-State because "USSA comes in on a national level. A student from K-State couldn't be in Washington D.C. all the time monitoring what's going on. Now we The allocated $410 caused dispute during the are paying for somebody to lobby in Washington constantly."

The cost for K-State to be in USSA for the nine-month trial period was $50, and after the trial period ends, Student Senate will vote to decide whether to keep the membership. If senate votes to approve K-State membership, the fee will be $250 annually.

THE TRIAL PERIOD will help K-State students decide whether the University will benefit from national lobbying techniques.

"This is why we joined the organization on a trial basis, to see if it is any good," Anderson said.

"USSA takes on national student issues," Anderson said, "and the big issue now that USSA is working with are the cuts to student financial aid that President Reagan proposed in his budget.

"I think it is important that K-State students show their concern for the national issues," Anderson said.

USSA works on a regional system and K-State is located in the area known as the Heartland Region, which includes Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

"USSA has two conferences a year, one in the fall and one in the spring," Anderson

At those conferences, issues are discussed and workshops are held.

TWO WEEKS AGO, USSA had its regional conference at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. Anderson represented K-State.

"At the conference I attended workshops dealing with areas such as lobbying techniques and media utilization, Anderson said.

Student Senate voted last Thursday to partially fund the cost to send two K-State represenatatives to USSA's national lobby conference in Washington, D.C., April 10-14. meeting.

The Finance Committee recommended against that the money not be allocated.

"Finance Committee thought that money could be better spent in Topeka through SLN (Student Legislative Network) or mass lobby day," said Lewann Schneider, director of the committee.

David Lehman, junior in agricultural economics, and David Sandritter, freshman in finance, have currently been chosen as K-State's delegates.

Residents file appeal on rezoning decision

Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Westside Homeowners Association have filed an appeal in the state Court of Appeals in a case challenging a zoning change made by the Manhattan City Commission and planning board.

In the original suit filed in Riley County District Court, the homeowners association asked for a court review of city and planning board action on a request to rezone an area in west Manhattan to allow construction of public housing.

Four of the five counts in the suit were dismissed in February by District Court Judge Jerry Mershon.

"The case was dismissed on four counts, but decided in favor of the city on one count," Joe Gerdom, Manhattan senior city planner, said.

Mershon decided in favor of the city-ruling against a complaint that the city had illegally voided the previous decisions on rezoning.

The property which is under scrutiny is just off Hudson and Anderson and was rezoned and purchased by the city for "turnkey public housing," Gerdom said.

Turn-key public housing is built by a private developer and then sold to the city after it is complete and ready for the renter to "turn the key" and move in, he said.

Residents near the proposed housing development don't want the public land rezoned to allow for public housing in the neighborhood, according to Bob Krekel, president of the Westside Manhattan Homeowners Association.

"The suit was filed because we believe, besides illegal spot zoning, the issue of rezoning land for the housing development was before the city and the planning board at different times and we won at one or the other each time.

"In the part of town where the proposed plot for the low-income housing is to be built there is already a low-income housing project and we don't feel it is our responsibility to have so many low-income houses in our neighborhood," Krekel said.

The Westside Homeowners Association is not opposing this type of housing, but is against public housing which requires rezoning of the neighborhood for public housing projects, Krekel said.

The petition filed in court requested a review of the proceedings, findings and recommendations of the planning board and the city commission when each board agreed to the redisgnation.

> According to the petition, either the planning board or the city had disapproved three times a private developer's request to rezone the land for public housing.

> The Manhattan homeowners think these decisions should still stand, Krekel said.

These decisions were final, according to the petition, until interference by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

An official from HUD, according to the petition, conferred with Manhattan city officials on Aug. 22, 1980 and influenced them, with respect to their legislative authority, in adhering to the previous decisions they had made. After this, the rezoning request for the land in question, which was formerly disapproved, was said to be void.

Because of this action, the city was allowed to rezone the land for planned unit development.

Construction on the public housing, to be built in the disputed area, has not began, Gerdom said. The developer will probably wait until the case is decided before they begin construction, he said.

The reason the lake is low is because of "a fairly dry summer and fall," he said.

The low elevation has caused some inconveniences for people wanting to use the lake for recreation, he said.

'Five Easy Pieces' shows '70s as time of escape from reality

Editors note: "Five Easy Pieces" will be shown at 3:30 today in the Little Theatre, and at 7 tonight in Forum Hall.

By JIM MELIZA

Collegian Reviewer Throughout the decade Jack Nicholson has been presented through many diverse characters. He has portrayed the vastly different lead characters of "The Shining," "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," and

"Chinatown." Despite these differences, there remains a specific Nicholson style that pervades each of his movies.

One of his best roles is that of Bobby in "Five Easy Pieces." Perhaps the major change in this Nicholson character is that Bobby is searching to find his identity, rather than being an established person.

The result is a character and a movie that define the spirit of the '70s. "Five Easy Pieces" is one of those placid films that explore the human psyche, much like those by Ingmar Bergman or Robert Altman. This movie is more intriguing than spellbinding.

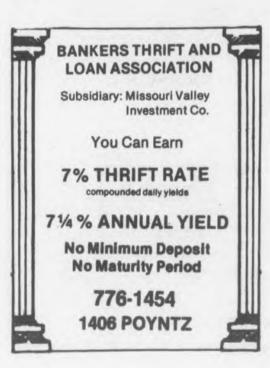

The lack of excitement is not really a problem. In fact, Nicholson is much less intense than in his other movies, making his presence more demanding. Nicholson doesn't have to battle someone to be the most important person on camera; he commands the film.

Kenneth Crease, 17, denied being present during the killings when he appeared before Sedgwick County District Judge Ray Hodge on Tuesday.

Crease admitted participating in several burglaries, but denied he was present when Robert and Letha Temple were shot during a break-in at their Wichita home on Aug. 30,

We aren't asked to like Bobby-many of his attitudes are despicable. He is involved with a blank-minded girl (Karen Black) whose whining could curdle milk. Her only crime is that she pushes too hard for attention, but his punishment is to cruelly

We may not like Bobby, but his desire to escape from life's insipid qualities is familiar. Perhaps the '70s bred so many ways to escape that a person was not complete unless he had gone through Director Bob Rafelson has created a film that is dated only by its clothing design. Studies into human nature, such as this, are timeless essays of self-evaluation.

Senate to approve Scanlan's cabinet at tonight's meeting

Approval of Student Body President Angela Scanlan's cabinet members will be first on the agenda in tonight's Student Senate meeting.

Administrative assistants approved by Scanlan have been interviewing applicants for about three weeks to fill the 17 available cabinet positions. People for 15 of the positions have been selected and will be voted on in the meeting. Decisions on the remaining two positions have not been

A bill sponosored by Lafene Student Health Center Advisory Committee will be heard in first readings.

"The bill is to establish a committee to examine the bids submitted to the student health center for student health insurance," Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman, said.

The insurance policy with Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Kansas will expire Aug. 25 and the advisory committee sent out its information and accepted bids for a new carrier, according to Dodds.

"Occidental Life Insurance of California returned the lowest bid and the student health advisory committee is asking us to accept that bid," Dodds said.

Senate will hear a resolution for supplemental funding for the All-University Open House.

Senate previously allocated $1,040 to supplement and complete the budget for a portion of the open house. The money came from the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce for the "enhancement of open house." There were two groups with access to the funds: Mortar Board and a group for minority recruitment.

"Mortar Board exceeded the amount provided," Dodds said, "and this resolution just makes up the difference, which is $211.50."

If senate passes the resolution, the money will come out of Student Senate reserves, Dodds said.

Concern for The Businessman

The proposed mall will disrupt the present business district for 2 to 3 years and would destroy businesses that have been in this area for years by relocating them. It will disrupt shopping patterns, traffic, and will definitely affect the flow of our community. As it stands now, only the proposed developer, an outside entity, would have control of construction. I feel that a project of this magnitude should benefit local contractors and builders.

The taxpayers and businesses have spent a great deal of money over the years to support the community activities of downtown and that effort should not be undermined by the mail. REMEMBER: IT IS THE "PRICE" OF GOODS AND SERVICES AND NOT FANCY BUILDINGS, WHICH CAUSE PEOPLE TO SHOP CERTAIN LOCATIONS.

Winpisinger offers economic policy choices

The proposed budget cuts by the Reagan administration are the president's devise to revitalize America. William Winpisinger thinks the proposed cuts are benefiting large corporations at the expense of small businesses.

Winpisinger, a left-wing labor spokesman and president of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAMAW), spoke at the All-University Convocation Thursday morning.

According to Winpisinger, the Reagan administration's proposed budget cuts threaten every program valuable to Americans.

By TERI GROFT The American traditions of democracy and equal opportunity now face the greatest challenge in

"Reagan said he was going to get the government off the backs of the people. But let me tell you that's just a code word for putting the corporations on," Winpisinger

"Reagan says he's going to run this country like a business," he said. "What business? Chrysler, the railroads, or like the big oil companies?

"I don't believe that very many Americans...would rather live in a country run by private corporations than by elected public officials," he said.

ALTHOUGH REAGAN critizes the Soviets for being dishonest, the same can be said of his administration, Winpisinger said.

"The Reagan administration steals from the workers and gives to the rich," he said. "It steals from the poor and gives to the Pentagon.'

Reagan is not actually cutting the budget, he said, but transferring money, cut from the domestic budget, to the Pentagon, "and the handful of corporations that live off it are much like leeches on the body politic."

The proposed budget cuts are all designed to free money to "puff up the Pentagon," he said.

REAGAN JUSTIFIES the proposed budget cuts by saying, 'You can't solve problems by throwing money at them," he said, but "you can't provide for national security by throwing money at the Pentagon.'

National security involves more than the Pentagon's budget, he said. It involves a vigorous economy, high employment, a sound dollar, a thriving industrial base and strong elements of trade.

"He has said that food is a weapon, and he's proving it, by using it against millions of Americans by denying their access to food stamps," he said. "He says he's for the work ethic, and then he cuts CETA, upon which at least one million Americans today depend. He says he's going to put a safety net under those who are of need, then he proceeds to cut unemployment benefits in half. He says he believes in the family, yet he is cutting infant and maternal programs, and makes no provisions for child care."

SEVEN BASIC economic recovery policies have been developed by the IAMAW to make government better serve individual citizens.

One of these policies would establish a foreign trade policy agency which would link foreign trade priorities to domestic policy, he said. He said this would be effective because the United States no longer dominates foreign markets and must function as equal competitors to other countries.

Winpisinger said reforms are needs in areas including: domestic, economic and industrial policy, work conditions, energy policy, inner cities, taxing based on equity, and democratic apportionment of electoral districts.

"I have no illusions about how difficult it will be to achieve the goals of this program," Winspinger said. "I am all too familiar how much disarray and confusion there is among the people who are supposed to be moving this country forward."

Greeks dominate senate members

Students argue uneven representation

By DEANNA HUTCHISON Collegian Reporter

A U.S. Supreme Court decision in the early 1960s forced states to reapportion legislative districts to provide equal representation for all voters.

Although this decision doesn't apply to Student Senate, its ramifications have led some to question the representation on Student Senate, both past and present, as to whether it adequately reflects the views and needs of K-State students.

Of 49 student senators elected for 1980-81, 36 percent were greek students, 40 percent residence hall students and 24 percent off-campus students. The 1981-82 senate is made up of 50 percent greek students, 30 percent residence hall students, and 20 percent offcampus students.

BASED ON FALL 1980 figures. 20 percent of the student body lives in greek houses and 25.2 percent live in residence halls. About 55 percent of students live offcampus.

"There's always been a higher percentage of greeks in senate as there are on campus," said Mark Zimmerman, last year's Student Senate chairman and member of a fraternity. "The people who get elected are those in organized living groups.

"It's something I've noticed," he said. "People would come in and they'd realize that there isn't the proper representation among living groups. Ninety-nine percent of the time it's just not a problem."

Senators from last year agree with Zimmerman about the uneven representation.

"It's true-simply because what often happens is that you have a built-in number who'll vote for you," said Rob Altland, senior in marketing and political science and off-campus student. "In some houses you get points for voting, and you are asked to vote for members or little sisters."

"The reason why the greek houses are better represented is that the majority of the voters are greek," said Geri Greene, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and political science and a member of a sorority.

THERE IS DISAGREEMENT. however, on how much this uneven representation affects decisions of senate.

In the year-and-a-half I've been on senate, I've never even thought about the fact that there were more greeks," said Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman and member of a fraternity.

"I can't tell you today who lives in a greek house and who doesn't. of all the senators I knew from last year," Susan Angle, coordinator of student activities, said. "It wasn't apparent to me at all."

But Altland said the differences are apparent.

"The way the people think in greek houses and those (greeks) who are on senate doesn't jive with the average student at K-State," Altland said. "This was really prevalent when going over the campaign expenditure limitation

ANOTHER MAJOR AREA of difference is fee increases, Altland

"You have students who go to school and that's all, and then you have students who have to work," he said. "The off-campus students...don't want to increase fees. To pay any more-it's just too expensive. "But then you have the greek senators who are saying 'What's money? Mom and Dad are going to foot the bill anyway'," Altland said.

Zimmerman said he agreed that off-campus students are not properly represented on some issues and used the day-care centers on campus as an example.

"Senate has traditionally not been very generous in funding something like that," he said. "Very few people would run or would have time for senate who would be sensitive to that type of an issue."

IN 1978, senate discussed changing the representation from apportionment by college to apportionment by living group.

None of the senators contacted this year favored such a plan, although they opposed it for different reasons.

"We might get a more diverse opinion on some issues if there were more off-campus people on senate, but I think representation by college is good," said LewAnn Schneider, freshman in preveterinary medicine and residence hall member. "I think if we did it by living groups, it would be hard to get as much diversity in academic areas. All of us are here as students."

In disagreement, Zimmerman said, "I don't really think that senators represent the interests of their colleges that much. It's probably true that they represent the people they live with and their peers rather than their college.

Malfunctions endanger research

Collegian Reporter

The refrigeration unit in the Weber Hall meats lab malfunctioned twice Thursday, causing concern about the continuation of a research project and operation of the lab.

It is unknown whether the malfunction caused further damage to 10 bull carcasses being used for research, which were damaged when the refrigeration unit shut down early Wednesday.

"I do think that as we cut the carcasses, we're going to have to be very careful to look . for signs of deterioration," said Don Kropf, professor of animal science and industry.

The most recent equipment problem was the result of an electrical power loss Thursday afternoon in portions of Weber Hall that left the refrigeration unit without power for nearly 45 minutes, he said.

A MALFUNCTION Thursday morning caused the unit's compressors to shut down. The shutdown allowed the temperature in the cooler to reach 50 degrees before it was discovered and the problem corrected.

A U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) meat inspector has been asked keep a watch on the situation, according to

He did not discount the possibility that the USDA could temporarily shut the lab down until improvements are made, although he

By KIM WOLFE said he did not expect that to happen.

A USDA inspector has suggested installation of an alarm that would alert the staff of mechanical troubles, he said.

"I think that's a reasonable request," Kropf said. "I think they're going to look over our shoulder very closely in this case."

MEMBERS OF a research team experimenting with carcass quality and eating characteristics in meats from animals implanted with growth stimulants are becoming more concerned about the problems because it is damaging their evidence, Kropf said.

Their main concern is that the 10 bull carcasses from slaughter Tuesday have not been completely chilled, he said. The normal chilling temperature is 36 degrees.

A unit shutdown early Wednesday allowed the temperature to rise to 70 degrees.

Wednesday's breakdown caused damage to available evidence which the carcasses contained, however some data could still be collected, Kropf said.

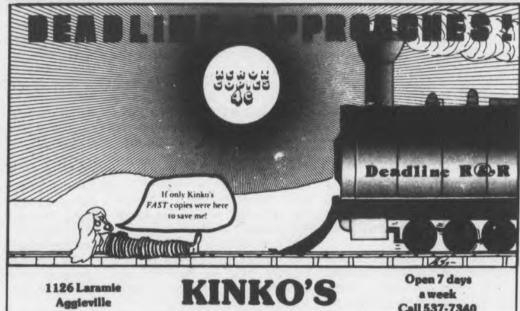

He said that if the meats are tender, the researchers could not be sure whether the tenderness was caused by the implant or by the exposure to high temperatures.

Researchers will continue to process the carcasses, Kropf said. However the data will not be complete and he said they would have to check it closely.

"But a lot of the issues senate works on are like the funding of UFM (University for Man), which was the big issue last year, or the stand that senate took on whether (former Rhodesian prime minister) Ian Smith should speak," Zimmerman said. "On issues like that, I don't really think a student's living group makes a difference. But I don't really think that their college makes much of a difference either."

THE PROBLEM with election by living group would be increased apathy, Altland said.

"In the only universities where they've done that, the senates aren't good," he said. "You had people in senate who just didn't care about it."

This apathy would result not only in a lack of candidates, but would also help perpetuate the present low levels of voting participation, Greene said.

Although the movement for elections by living group wasn't successful, it did result in the formation of the Off-Campus Student Association.

"The association was formed as a branch of student government," Angle said. "I think there was a feeling that we should form a peer network for off-campus

THE PURPOSE of the association is to be the voice of off-campus students to student government, the University and the community, according to its constitution.

"We've had a slow start but we're headed that way," Gene Russell, president of the association, said. "A lot of what we do is a reflection of the input we get from the people at our meetings. We've been stressing the social part because the people who come to the meetings say that's what they want.

"A lot of people won't come unless we specifically say that we're going to work on intramurals, a formal, or have a speaker or something," Russell said.

"We are starting to get into working with student government now," he said. "We're going to be working with those involved in the mass transit study and ASK (Associated Students of Kansas) has been asking us about the landlord-tenant bills."

THOUGH THE ASSOCIATION has not lobbied within senate, Russell said he hoped its members would in the future.

"Right now there's not a way we can adequately express our views except by talking to a senator and not many do that,' Russell said. "It's hard to get them channeled in the right direction."

The association has helped bring students together socially, Angle said, but there is still work to be done.

Senate approves budget cut plan

WASHINGTON — The Senate handed President Reagan the biggest legislative triumph of his young administration Thursday night, voting overwhelming approval of a plan to force $87 billion in budget cuts over the next three years.

The bill, attacked by outnumbered liberals as a "cruel abandonment" of the nation's needy but hailed by Republicans and most Democrats as a historic turning point in the battle to control spending, passed on a vote of 88-10.

"This is a first and major installment in fiscal responsibility," Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, (R-N.M.) said of the measure, which calls for savings of $2.3 billion this year, $36.9 billion in 1982 and $47.7 billion in 1983.

The bill follows Reagan's own proposals for cuts virtually dollarfor-dollar. Its passage came with unusual swiftness, less than a month after the president delivered his final recommendations to Congress on March 10.

But in addition to being a triumph for the president, the measure represented an achievement for the Republicans, who used their new majority in the Senate to reject more than two dozen Democratic attempts to restore cuts in their favorite social programs.

Spirited Reagan takes hospital stroll...

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, making "super" progress, took two strolls around his hospital compound Thursday while life support tubes remained fixed in his chest and nose. He told two visiting senators: "I found out it hurts to get shot."

After his best night's sleep since an apparent ricochet bullet tore into his left lung in Monday's assassination attempt, the president was in "extremely good spirits" according to his personal physician. Reagan walked for 50 yards Thursday morning, then, joined by wife Nancy, ventured out of his room again in the late afternoon.

Qualified medical sources reported that in the moments after Reagan arrived at the hospital emergency room, doctors "thought they might lose him" because he was hemorrhaging internally although there was no indication he had been shot.

O'Leary "flatly" denied the president was ever in danger of dying from the wound. But he acknowledged that his own information came second-and third-hand. Direct sources, including a senior physician involved, told The Associated Press that Reagan had lost nearly half his blood.

...Hinckley competent to stand trial...

WASHINGTON — John Hinckley Jr., said to have vowed to "get Reagan" in desperate hope for a film star's heart, was deemed competent to stand trial Thursday, but was sent to North Carolina for further sanity tests.

Hinckley could remain at the Butner federal corrections facility near Durham, N.C., for up to 90 days as authorities attempt to determine his state of mind when Reagan was shot Monday.

The 25-year-old defendant, wearing a white, bullet-proof vest, was a calm but intense observer as he heard Magistrate Lawrence Margolis order the charge of attempting to assassinate the president bound over to a federal grand jury.

Margolis agreed with a court-appointed psychiatrist that Hinckley is "presently mentally competent to stand trial," but told the government to conduct further sanity tests. Shortly thereafter, Hinckley was flown to the Butner facility, arriving in late afternoon.

... Brady makes steady progress

WASHINGTON — Presidential press secretary James Brady is making "satisfactory progress" in recovering from a bullet wound to his brain, but remains in critical condition, doctors said Thursday.

Brady, whose recovery is described as "exceptional," has made steady progress but is not out of danger, said Dr. Dennis O'Leary, administrator of George Washington University Hospital.

O'Leary told a White House news briefing that the cautious optimism expressed by doctors should not be interpreted to mean that Brady is past the worst and will recover fully.

"There is no evidence of any complications at this time," he said, but cautioned that a "whole spectrum" of complications could arise, such as brain swelling, seizures and infection.

"It's far too early to indicate any neurological assessment,"

O'Leary said. It could take six to 12 months to fully assess how much physical and mental damage Brady sustained, and even a preliminary assessment could take weeks, he said.

Sign is sad comment

Following the attempted assassination of President Reagan on Monday, a local business reportedly displayed a sign which read: "Who shot R.R?"

Fortunately the sign wasn't displayed long.

The sign was an obvious attempt to equate Reagan's shooting to the media hype last summer about "who shot J.R." in the television soap opera "Dallas."

However, such an attempt at humor is more than a simple example of poor taste and poor judgment in a serious situation.

Almost 20 years ago, when President Kennedy was assassinated, no one would have considered such a display. Since that initial shock, assassinations and attempted assassinations have become commonplace events.

The upheaval of the '60s and the increasing terrorism of the '70s have dulled the senses.

The immunity to violence, the insensitivity to events displayed by the sign, is a sad comment on the direction society is taking.

Weber deserves better treatment

The failure of a refrigeration unit Wednesday and again Thursday in the Weber Hall meats lab, which resulted in damage to a research project, is unfortunate.

If it were the first time it might be excusable. However, the refrigeration units in Weber Hall require constant maintenance. As Melvin Hunt, associate professor of animal sciences and industry said, "They're just trying to put Band-Aids over gaping holes."

In April of 1980, the U.S. Department of Agriculture temporarily shut down Weber Hall's smoke room after it failed to meet federal standards.

While the College of Arts and Sciences has outgrown the College of Agriculture, agriculture still remains a vital part of the University and deserves better treatment.

Renovation of Weber Hall is on the University's capital improvements list but has not received endorsement from the Board of Regents. The regents should not slight this project again. Accidents such as those Wednesday and Thursday occur too often to justify further neglect.

Unusual pets suffer

Editor,

RE: The story in Wednesday's paper about students who keep unusual pets.

It's unfortunate you chose to run this since it may encourage more people to buy exotic animals. This could further aggravate two problems.

First, creatures likes boas and iguanas are not bred in captivity, but are caught in the wild. This puts undue pressure on wild populations. Already many reptile species have become scarce, the victims of commercial collectors.

Second, the story might encourage people to get pets which they aren't qualified to care for. A case in point is Paul Grimes, who was interviewed because he owns a boa constrictor and a Burmese python. Grimes claims (or was it the reporter's misunderstanding?)

that loud music at parties can excite his pets. Any 12-year-old who has looked in an encyclopedia knows that snakes are deaf. More likely, Grimes' pets don't like being handled by crowds of people.

While being ignorant of a serpent's deafness may never endanger its health, Grimes obviously didn't do even the most basic research to learn about his pets before getting them.

Unfortunately, this is typical of most exotic animal owners. They see something neat in a pet shop and buy it to liven up parties. Meanwhile, the animal suffers. For people like this, unusual pets are nothing more than a way of scratching itchy egos.

In tribute to an ordinary man

In most black families, it is custom to bring a covered dish to the home of loved ones when a member of the family has passed away. This is done, I believe, because it will help ease the burden of maintaining the care of the family while going through the funeral ritual. It is a way to show care, concern and love by way of sustenance.

On March 30, my maternal grandfather, George Willis, died at the age of 78. Because I am unable to attend his funeral in Oakland, Calif., I shall write my covered dish, my gift of care and concern.

Daddy George, was an ordinary man who lived through extraordinary times. In 1932, he hitched freight trains from Texas, heading toward California to make a life for himself. His first stop was the San Joaquin Valley, working in the vineyards, contracting grapes. Wanderlust, or the desire to do more for himself, (more than likely the latter) moved him onward up the coast.

HE MARRIED my grandmother, Gladys, in 1936 and journeyed with her to Oakland, where they were to maintain their home for the remainder of his life.

Daddy George was a big man, 6'6', 315 pounds. Most would think a man of his stature would have a menacing character, liable to do more harm to a body than good. This was not the case with "Big George"; the name his friends and acquaintances called him. He was a gentle giant, who would sooner cradle a little baby in his arms and rock it to sleep all night long than allow that child to cry. His family, his own, were his life. If Daddy George couldn't do for his family, he would want to know why, and I'm sure the answer had better have been satisfactory to him.

He wanted the best life had to offer and believed that if you wanted it, by God, you worked for it, and work he did. As a journeyman machinist in the shipyards, where he worked until retirement.

I CAN see him now, in his Big Mac overalls, made with enough denim to clothe two men, large meaty hands, with a voice that seemed to come from the bottom of his feet, it was so deep. But still, he was ever the most gentle man.

He loved the sea and he loved to fish, he would take his 7-foot boat out on the ocean on the weekends and go wherever the fish were supposed to be, and sometimes he went where the fish weren't supposed to be. He was a sportsman. He loved big cars, which he drove like a Kamikaze pilot. He was a man with a love for the simple pleasures in life and enjoyed them to the fullest.

He was not what most would call a religious man, he left the church going to Gladys. But I believe that in his heart, and in his day-to-day life, he carried the all encompassing love of nature and people and goodness that many would do well to try to emulate. Toward the end of his life, in February to be exact, he made his peace with God. He joined the church and attended until sickness would no longer allow him the strength to continue. He got right with his God, as the old saying goes. I'm sure that as far as the Lord was concerned, if I can be so bold as to make an assumption of this sort, Daddy George had been "right with Him" all along.

MY GRANDFATHER lived through so much in his lifetime and saw so many changes in this world. He lived from the era of Jim Crow through the era of the space age. He saw the oppressive times of the black life experience change and revert and change again. He lived through the black power movements of the '60s (the Panthers got their start in Oakland). I wonder now what he must have thought about them. I wonder if he was in sympathy with them or not. It is now too late for me to know about his politics firsthand, I feel quite sad about that.

I am from a military family, and because of our rather nomadic lifestyle, I was often unable to be close enough to him to experience him on a day-to-day basis, that in itself gives me cause for deep regret. But I do have a few memories, and I'm sure that if I want to know more, my "Big Mama" (that's what we call my grandmother) will be more than willing to oblige with the details.

My covered dish is now complete. I have added the few meager ingredients in my ladder of memories to make my gift of sustenance. I hope that it will give the nourishment to the soul of Daddy George, and the rest of the family, as it is meant to do. But then, it is meant to be only for an ordinary man, but I feel it is richer than the highest king could ever

Fragments: Professors determine criminal unknown by studying variety of materials, bones Professors determine criminal unknowns

By DIANNE DANNER Collegian Reporter

Crime labs, such as the one on television's "Quincy," are involved in solving criminal puzzles through various research devices. Although K-State doesn't have an equipped criminal laboratory, it does have several professors who are involved in forensic

"K-State is somewhat unique in having a fair amount of expertise at the University in respect to forensic science," Michael Finnegan, associate professor of sociology and anthropology, said.

Forensic science is "the application of science to the purposes of the law," he said.

Finnegan spends much of his time studying bones. He is one of the "most qualified forensic anthropolgists in the area," he said.

CRIME LABS across the country have sought out his expertise in the criminal identification of skeletal remains.

"Often they (crime labs) will get a case where they find a body that has been out in the environment for over three months," he said. "A forensic pathologist (medical examiner) could analyze the tissue, but its mostly skeleton.

"Forensic pathologists don't know their way around skeletons. They don't know the range of variation of bone morphology or structure and we look at bone everyday," he

By examining skeltons, Finnegan can determine such things as the age, sex, stature and race of the victim and how he was killed. He is currently using a method which examines a person's teeth to indicate their age at the time of death.

Often this information will be determined for police when a skelton is found. Unfortunately, it may not fit any of the known missing persons. In cases such as these, facial restorations are made from the study of bone features from the skull, he said.

"It's one thing to identify these characters. It's something else to find the bad guy," he said. "It has been unlikely in the past to identify the bad guy.

"The cases I've worked on which were obviously homicide, I have not been to court for yet," Finnegan said.

In court, he would have to establish it was the suspect who he identified and then prove he was killed by a specific method.

DETERMINING VARIOUS unknowns by studying bones and teeth is a satisfying job, Finnegan said.

"It's old detective work. It's kind of exciting and satisfying to find out your identifications are absolutely correct or very close," he said.

Cliff Meloan, professor of chemistry, is involved in the study of criminalistics, which deals with applied physical science in criminai anaiysis.

Meloan primarily uses the areas of chemistry and physics to study a wide range of materials including blood types, hair, and gun powder patterns.

Evidence such as glass fragments found at the scene of the crime are studied to determine whether they match the fragments found in a suspect's clothing.

Tool impressions, such as markings or scratches in wood, are also studied to determine the instrument used in cases such as a forceable entry.

MELOAN HAS BEEN contacted for help in local arson cases. In these cases, he uses a gas chromatograph to distinguish different components found in gases, which will give "some clue to what was used in starting the fire," he said.

A high pressure liquid chromatograph is used to analyze bomb residue to determine what kind of explosive was used.

Meloan has been involved with criminalistics for about six years and often does work for the Riley County Police Department or area lawyers.

Meloan said he enjoys this work because "everybody likes to be a little Sherlock Holmes sometimes."

Also working with Meloan is Marc Feldman, graduate student in analytical chemistry. He is doing his thesis work for his doctorate in criminalistics.

Feldman is currently working on "developing a new reagent for the detection of fingerprints on human skin," he said.

In cases such as rape or strangulation, there are methods to pick up the offender's fingerprints from the victim's neck or

The methods now being used to detect fingerprints are expensive and require a lot of expertise and technique to use, Feldman

THE EXISTING METHODS allow fingerprints to be picked up from the body up to 45 minutes after they have been placed there. The fingerprints must then be photographed and developed. It takes an additional 30 minutes to determine if the print will be good.

In Feldman's method, a piece of clear photograpic film with chemicals applied to it is used to pick up the fingerprints. This technique is able to pick up prints up to an hour after they have been placed on the

Because his prints come out clear, they don't need to be photographed and within three to four seconds he can determine if it is a good print, he said.

"My method is therefore faster, less complicated, takes less technique and is cheaper," Feldman said.

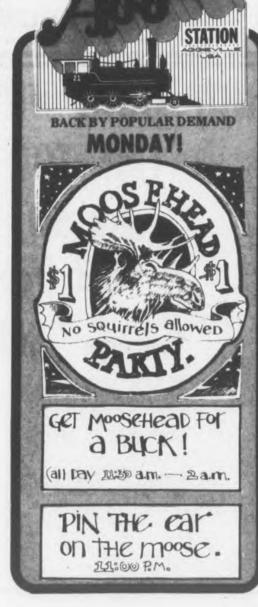

He is also working on "evidence correlation" in tire slashing. This process involves picking up minute particles of sidewall rubber left on instruments used in slashing tires, which can be used as physical evidence in court, he said.

DEVELOPING TECHNIQUES suitable for forensic fiber analysis, is an ongoing project for Randall Bresee, assistant professor of clothing, textiles and interior Fiber analysis is used to study clothing fibers found at the scene of a crime to determine whether it can be traced back to the suspect.

"We all have a unique life and that is reflected in our clothing," Bresee said.

Factors that give fibers unique characteristics include the laundering of the fabric, its exposure to sun, smog or other physical elements and the wearer's body oils on the clothing, he said.

ANOTHER AREA that uses forensic science is geology. Page Twiss, professor of geology, explained how soils and rocks could be used in criminal research.

In most cases, the forensic geologist will examine elements found in soils, mud or rocks in order to trace where they are located, he said.

"Any trace of soil, rocks or powder that is found on a suspect's clothes, cuffs of pants, shoes or car would be examined," Twiss said. These specific samples of muds or soils could prove that the suspect was at the scene of the crime.

Twiss cited the example of a murder case in Colorado. A stolen car was abandoned in New Jersey and a forensic geologist was called to examine the vehicle.

According to Twiss, the geologist examined the layers of mud and soil found under the fender of the car and traced it to Colorado. He later traced it to a specific town and then to the ranch where the the murder took place.

U.S. offers food aid for Poland while Soviet activity strengthens WASHINGTON (AP) — Amid warnings that the Soviet Union has acted within the past two days to strengthen its ability to move into Poland, Vice President George Bush announced Thursday that the United States will send new food aid to the troubled country.

After a meeting with Deputy Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Jaglieski, Bush said the administration plans to sell dairy products to Poland at concessionary prices.

He did not say what other assistance is being contemplated but other officials had said Wednesday the administration may agree to allow Poland to defer repayment on its $2.5 billion debt to the U.S. government. The admistration already has permitted Poland to defer $88 million in debt repayments.

Concern of Soviet activity along the Polish border was raised by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger in testimony before the Senate Budget Committee.

Weinberger also told the panel the U.S. is "taking ... steps" to meet the threat.

At ceremonies in Casteau, Belgium, marking the 30th anniversary of the allied forces in Europe, NATO Supreme Commander Gen. Bernard Rogers said Warsaw Pact military exercises in and around Poland have increased the ability of Soviet bloc armies to intervene there.

"We observe the forces around the bor-

But Rogers said there were no indications the Soviet Union has plans to intervene in Poland or that such intervention is inevitable.

He declined to discuss what military moves NATO was taking in response to the Soviet buildup, but said that if the Russians intervened he would "seek political guidance for ... prudent, precautionary, defensive measures."

In Warsaw, the Solidarity labor federation has canceled its nationwide strike alert and the union and the government are to hold further talks next week in an effort to ease friction.

"It looks as if the situation around Poland is and remains very serious and that there is the capability with the Soviet and Warsaw Pact troops to take steps in Poland that would be totally incompatible with the country's maintaining any independent decision at all." Weinberger said decision at all," Weinberger said.

When asked whether steps were being "taken in that direction," meaning steps by the Soviet Union, Weinberger, obviously thinking the question referred to steps by the United States, said, "To the extent that we have planned, yes, we are taking those steps."

Syrian artillery ravages Christian areas in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Tank, rocket and artillery fire battered Christian neighborhoods in east Beirut for several hours Thursday, closing the international airport and, by one account, killing dozens of civilians.

Zahleh, a Roman Catholic city 30 miles to the east, was under Syrian tank fire for the second day in what the Syrian command said was an attempt to stop the rightist Christians from strengthening their militia base.

A shaky cease-fire, interrupted by sniper fire across the "Green Line" separating the Moslem and Christian sectors of the capital, took hold by nightfall after a plea by President Elias Sarkis.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli radio quoted deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori as saying Israel "will not stand quiet if there is a threat to the Christian community" in Lebanon.

Former Lebanese President Camille Chamoun, who now heads an alliance of rightist Christian militias and parties, issued a statement calling on the United Nations to send in troops to take over from the Syrians, who have been here as peacekeepers since a cease-fire in the 1975-76 civil war.

"We shall not allow the peaceful Lebanese population to remain the target of aggression," said Chamoun, who got the U.S. government to send Marines to Lebanon in 1958 during a leftist revolt.

The Phalangist-operated Voice of Lebanon radio said a total of 46 civilians were killed and 196 wounded in the two cities.

Bachir Gemayel, the Phalangist military commander, said 26 Christians were killed and 138 wounded in east Beirut when the Syrians unleashed their barrage from positions just behind the Moslem line.

Gemayel, whose father heads the Phalangist Party, said his driver was wounded by sharpnel when a Syrian rocket exploded a few yards from his car.

Value formation is subject of weekend conference

The role of values in the classroom will be discussed today and Saturday at a conference sponsored by the Kansas Committee for the Humanities (KCH) in the Union.

"Our goal is to promote discussion about the presence of the teaching of values in schools and homes and to stimulate thought about ways to bring discussion into the open—particularly in school—rather than leave them unspoken assumptions," said Jared Namenson, coordinator of the conference and director of the Living Learning School in Manhattan.

The conference is made possible by a grant from KCH, a local group that works with the National Endowment for the Humanities, Namenson said.

Namenson said he believes values that were primarily taught by the church and family are now being taught in schools.

The conference preview, "Values in Teaching and Rearing Children," led by Buddy Gray, associate professor of history, will discuss the question, "Is there such a thing as a value-free education?"

Namenson said he believes the answer is no.

"Whatever you do, you are teaching values....For example, you teach values by who you call on in class—boys or girls. If you raise a male child different from a female child, whether you accept or challenge the status quo, either way you are teaching values," he said.

Session I, Friday, will set the tone for the conference and is "Ourselves in Past, Present and Future: Historical Perspective." The session will deal with the teaching of values and the rights of children.

Session II, also on Friday, "Our Planet and Its Future," will deal with the environment. Speakers during this session will discuss energy resources and conservation.

Session III, Saturday, will be "Our Gender." This session will explore how values associated with the roles of men and women affect child rearing.

Chinese typewriter... Kuo-Kwang Hu, professor of civil engineering, and Phillip Kirmser, professor of electrical engineering, check a copy of symbols from the Chinese typewriter that they designed.

Professors develop new typewriter

By SUSAN LAVERENTZ
Collegian Reporter
The use of phonetic spelling has been put to use by two engineering professors who have developed a new and simpler typewriter for the Chinese language.

"What took us one hour to think of, took us 10 years to carry out," Philip Kirmser, professor of electrical engineering, said.

He and Kuo-Kwang Hu, associate professor of civil engineering, have been researching and developing their Chinese typewriter since 1971. The typewriter is made for the Mandarin Chinese dialect, the main dialect of China, Hu said.

On a business trip, Kirmser and Hu discussed the idea of indexing Chinese dictionaries.

Instead of alphabetical order—which the Chinese don't use—for the dictionary, they decided to use phonetics to organize the index. The phonetic system, which had been developed but was primarily used for pronunciation, has not been used extensively in indexing, Hu said.

The Chinese typewriter currently in use requires specialized training, so the new typewriter is for use by the general public. "That was our goal, so that people can use it with as little training as possible," Kirmser said.

The new typewriter keyboard has 44 keys which represent 4,096 symbols. Thirty-six keys form symbols and eight are different punctuation marks.

"We have arranged the keyboard so that the frequency of usage is alternated between the left and right hand and each of the fingers," Kirmser said. "This avoids repeated use of the same hand or finger."

The typewriter now used in China is called the Double Pigeon which was made in Peking about 50 years ago, Hu said.

Typing on the Double Pigeon is a "painful and long" process, Hu said.

It contains three trays that hold a total of 4,500 Chinese characters, Kirmser said. The trays must then be switched back and forth as the typist uses the machine.

Kirmser and Hu got a patent for their new Chinese typewriter in 1978 and continued development.

The two men, plus Noh-Han Yuan, a Chinese businessman who lives in Kansas, have financed the invention themselves. The cost of their original typewriter was about

In the past, Student Senate has attempted to clear its agenda in preparation for tentative allocations. However, in last night's meeting, senators would not move a bill to special orders for a vote to decide whether to allocate $105.75 and will have to be considered along with tentative allocations next week.

The bill remaining for consideration is a request from Mortar Board for extra expenses incurred during the honorary's All University-Open House program. The original bill, sponsored by Randy Tosh, senior in political science, and Rich McKittrick, Union Governing Board president, requested $211.50 to cover the unpaid expenses. Tosh amended the bill to request half the amount explaining that Mortar Board would pay the remaining $105.75, taking the money from its own funds which are principlly assumed through alumni support.

Senate bombarded Mortar Board representative, McKittrick with questions concerning the precise breakdown of the costs listed on the bill. The requests would pay for posters, advertisements, postage and telephone costs and bulletin board expenses. McKittrick provided an account of each of the questioned expenses.

Finance Committee director LewAnn Schneider said the senate reserves for contingencies fund presently stood at $14,667. This figure, according to Schneider was already below the amount Finance Committee had hoped to have remaining in the account.

An attempt to move the bill to special orders for a vote was defeated and the bill will head the agenda at next week's meeting.

Assassin ends in squirting duel

"A little bit of controversy" ended the Assassin game, said Mike Somodi, junior in agricultural economics, who was declared the winner.

The game, which finished Thursday morning at 11:30, ended in a "duel," Somodi said. Somodi and Stuart Jorgensen, junior in economics, were the final participants when Somodi "shot" Jorgensen while they were outside Justin Hall.

Jorgensen claimed the game ended in a tie, but Somodi insisted he had won. The two worked out their differences and Jorgensen agreed to give up his game identification card, making Somodi the winner.

Somodi "killed" six people, shooting them with a contact lens bottle filled with water, during the three weeks of the game.

Although Somodi said he would probably play the game again if given the chance, "I'm glad it's over."

Jorgensen placed second, "'killing" five players, and Vincent Kearney, junior in accounting, came in third, shooting four participants.

The three winners will each receive two tickets each to the "Second City" comedy act, tonight.

Irish debate team uses humor to ridicule greedy Americans

By TANYA BRANSON Collegian Reporter

The Irish term it a "social event" and the Americans call it a debate. By either definition, the match-up of the Irish National Debate Team and two members of the K-State debate squad turned into a contest of slams last night in the Union Little Theatre. There was no judge, just an audience of about 50 to listen to the barbs.

The debate put three members of the Irish National Debate Team on tour in the United States—Gerry Stembridge, David Cooke and Sean Moran—against Ed Schiappa, K-State debate coach, and Chris Wheatley, member of the debate team and junior in speech.

The topic was "Resolved: That protection of the national environment is a more important goal than the satisfaction of American energy demands."

THE SHARP-TONGUED Irish team tried to prove that because of human nature Americans think of their own energy demands and satisfactions before thinking about effects on the environment.

Wheatley and Schiappa contended for K-State that Americans can maintain their energy demands and still preserve the environment.

The Irish countered the K-State team by attempting to prove the Wheatley-Schiappa philosophy ridiculous.

"The problem with Mr. Wheatley," Stembridge said, "is that he thought he was in control, kind of like your Secretary of State. All Wheatley produces is death and destruction. Death is the biggest killer of Americans."

STEMBRIDGE ALSO called the author of the book the K-Staters used as a source, "the laughing-stock of the European world."

Irishman Cooke used a joke to illustrate Americans' belief they can solve everything. Cooke said he had a relationship with Sheila, "a big woman that could have been a movie star," and proposed that she spend the night with him. "I have the need," Cooke said he told Sheila, "and you have the capabilities," at which point, Sheila hit him. Cooke said Americans must be realistic and discover they can't have everything they want.

The debate team from K-State was not without its slams to the Irish. "There are more Irish in New York City than in Ireland," Wheatley said, beginning his speech, "so we'll begin by considering Ireland part of the United States."

WHEATLEY SAID while Americans need to preserve the environment, "no one said that we have to return to the simple life in the Irish Spring commercials."

Schiappa began by giving the Irish debate team K-State frisbees as mementos of their visit. Stembridge, who Schiappa called "Ireland's answer to John Belushi," immediately poured himself a drink of water into the frisbee.

"The Irish are having a seven-course meal after the debate," Schiappa said. "For those not familiar with the Irish, it is a sixpack and a bag of potato chips."

Schiappa said at the close of the debate "the opposition necessarily isn't right, but then again, neither are we."

Before the debate, the Irish assessed Americans as "terribly sincere and very honest people." The Irish are cynical. They joke and insult, what they call "slagging," their best friends all the time, Stembridge said.

Durland Hall, Rm. 237 I.E. office amiable than those from other areas of the country, he said, and he believes the people of the midwest shouldn't put themselves down and not let others put them down. They are much more relaxed and straightforward.

IN IRELAND, debating is a social event, Stembridge said. The debaters attempt to persuade the audience, but if that's not possible, they try to entertain them. The audience participates by heckling or joking with the debaters if the speakers say something stupid or contrary to audience views, Stembridge said.

"Humor is a much bigger point," Stembridge said. "The method with public speakers is to insult them, don't say they're wrong. You ridicule the opposition and make yourself look important."

The Irish debaters learn to deal with the audience by listening and "thinking on their feet." The actual debate is not to prove the opposition wrong through facts but defeat them with the fallacies in their own philosophy, Stembridge said.

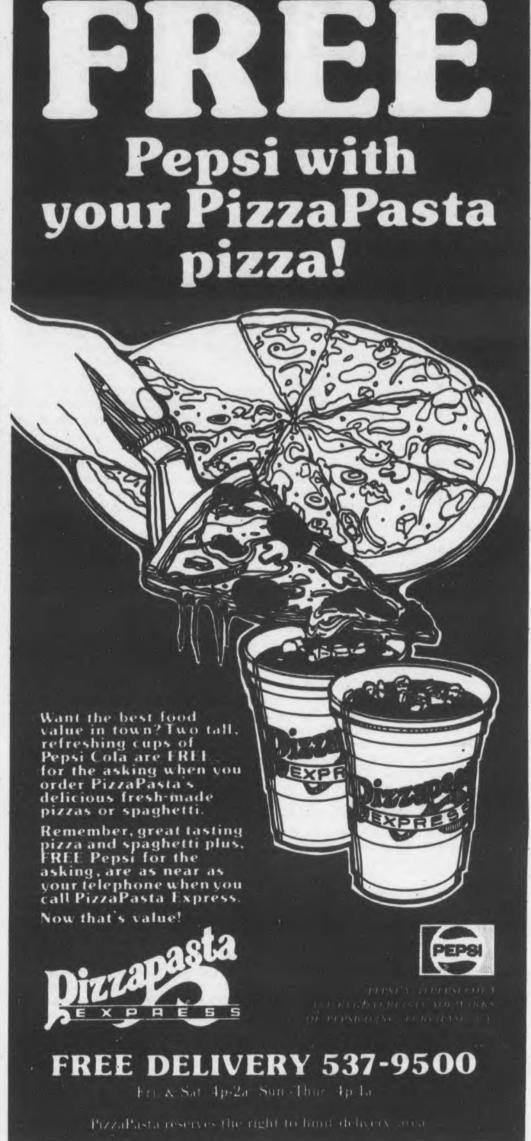

The debate teams in Ireland "have nothing to do with academics or the colleges," Stembridge said. "Therefore we try to make it as interesting and fun as we can. The topics are more relevant and we discuss things we want to develop."

Debates in Ireland are held weekly with different topics each week. They are well attended by students and the public.

"Americans don't want an audience at all," Stembridge said. "The students here have strong opinions but no forum for discussing them."

The Irish will travel to the University of Arkansas today for a debate before they leave for Ireland.

Concessions make sweet sales

Students show taste for tradition

Collegian Reporter

At first glance, Snickers candy bars and Marlboro cigarettes do not appear to have much in common, however they do at the K-State Union. Both are the "most requested" items at the campus center.

Snickers, a combination of peanuts, carmel and chocolate and the nation's bestselling candy bar, is also the most frequently purchased candy bar on the K-State campus, according to Bill Wisdom, manager of Union Concessions.

The Marlboro cigarette line dominates cigarette sales through the information desk located near the Union's north door, according to Cissie Cooper, supervisor of the desk.

During a "good month," Wisdom said orders for 20 cases of Snickers with 360 bars per case would pass through his office, later distributed through campus outlets including vending machines and the information desk.

M & M'S PEANUT CANDY closely follows Snickers in sales volume, placing second with a commanding market share over a host of lesser-selling products.

Snickers and M & M's peanut candies are products of M & M Mars, a New Jerseybased firm, which is America's largest candy producer in terms of sales, Wisdom said.

The Marlboro line, offering five types of cigarettes is a "consistant best seller of the product brand," Cooper said. Within the Marlboro line, Cooper said, Marlboro "Lights" and Marlboro "Regulars" are "neck in neck" for the top-selling spot.

The biggest change within the cigarette industry, Cooper said, has been diversification of products.

While the number of companies in cigarette production has remained nearly constant, more divisions have developed within each brand. Menthol, ultra-long and low tar-low nicotine types of cigarettes are included in this expansion.

LIGHT CIGARETTES, those with lower tar and nicotine content, have gained popularity recently, Cooper said. Merit has become the number-one selling light

Cooper said she hasn't noticed a

By GORDON DOWELL significant change in the overall number of total revenue and per-unit income of candy, label issued by the Surgeon General on the health effects of smoking.

"More older people are quitting but more younger people are starting," she said.

The information counter does the greatest amount of its business on Wednesdays, Cooper said, because "more people are on campus."

While bulk candy (sold by the pound) is a high volume product at the information desk, it doesn't out-sell bar (or prepackaged) candy, according to Cooper.

COOPER SAID she orders about 600 pounds of bulk candy every two or three weeks. One order, for Boston baked beans and jawbreakers, totaled 560 pounds which, she estimated, would last four or five weeks.

No packaged candy has entered the market which has challenged the "old standards," she said. Reeces Pieces candy has had the greatest market impact of recently-introduced items, she said.

Another candy bar, Go-Ahead, has mounted an advertising campaign based on its nutritional qualities. Consumers, Cooper said, have started reading such labels more often and are concerned with caloric information.

RONALD REAGAN'S TASTE for jellybeans has apparently not increased demand for this candy within the Union's market, she said. Jellybeans have always been a "good, steady seller, but there has been no change in demand for them since Reagan took office, Cooper said. Furthermore, the desk doesn't handle the brand the president favors.

Sales through campus vending machines have seen steady increases over the past few years, Wisdom said. Larger demand and newer, more convenient machines have aided this increase, he said.

Wisdom said he has not noticed seasonal buying trends, except that with fewer students, sales decline in the summer. Ice cream and canned pop maintain constant sales, he said.

WHILE THE VENDING MACHINES emit a greater volume of candy, canned soda is the leader "dollar-value wise," Wisdom said.

smokers following the consumer warning he said candy provided slightly more income than sandwiches, also sold through vending machines.

"We're a little bit behind the times as far as the average percent-of-gross that you want to make on a candy bar," he said.

In the four years he has worked in the concessions department, Wisdom has witnessed buying price increases of about 33 percent while selling prices have increased only five cents for most items.

The income received through concessions operations is "...a source of income to the Union operation," Wisdom said. Wisdom said the concessions program is a department of the Union. The annual income of the concessions department is about $800,000.

"We're trying to hold prices down as long as we can, but things continue to go up and prices are going to go up, naturally," he

By DALE BLANCHARD Contributing Writer

The power of illusion and sleight of hand is helping one K-State student through college. For Nicholas de Saint Erne, freshman in veterinary medicine, magic is the key to a

"I pay my full load through school on the magic shows I do," de Saint Erne said. "I pay for books, tuition and living expenses through performing magic shows and teaching it.

"A professional magician is someone who does magic for a living, and it is his only source of income," he said. "A semiprofessional magician does magic for money, but it is not his only source of income.

"I seem to fall in between those two descriptions because I am paying my way through school and it's my only source of income. When I get out of school, I will be semi-professional because I'll do it in my spare time," de Saint Erne said.

DE SAINT ERNE'S INTEREST in magic formed early in his life.

"My first encounter using magic was when I was in first-grade," he said. "My sister gave me a magic kit. I did my first show for some of my friends and classmates."

De Saint Erne was able to use his magical abilities to further his education even at an early age. He often incorporated magic into some of his classes in secondary school to add interest to the often mundane assignments given by his teachers, he said.

"When I was in 8th-grade, I read a magic book that showed me how to put on a magic show with a few things around the house. I was supposed to do a book report on this book, but instead I did a magic show in place of the book report.

"My teacher liked it so well that she had me put on this same show for a class of first and second-graders," he said.

"My first big show was in 1973 at the Coca Cola Bottling Plant in Wichita at a Christmas party. In the spring of 1974, I joined a magic club called 'Wizards of Wichita'. Today, there are 39 professional, semi--professional and amateur members."

DE SAINT ERNE SAID he has been doing magic for nine years. The transition from amateur to semi-professional caused him to question how much to charge for a show, and how much he was worth.

"I was very nervous when I started putting a price on my magic shows because I used to wonder if I was worth what I was charging. I used to do it (shows) free for non-profit organizations. Sometimes I still do," he said.
"My philosophy is to keep them wanting more. If you perform at the right time and give the audience only enough until they say that they want more, then they'll want you to come back," de Saint Erne said.

"A magician gets his thrills from fooling the audience; not the audience fooling him.

Therefore, I don't go around telling my tricks. It is not as much fun if the audience knows how magic is done."

DE SAINT ERNE SAID magic is the art of fooling the mind through forcing an inaccurate visual interpretation. A person is limited only by what the imagination can do, he said.

"Working with children is probably the hardest thing to do in magic because they are harder to fool. They are nosier and less restrained than an adult. If an adult sees a trick, they usually hesitate to say something. But children will yell out because they get excited. They don't have a long attention span. The audience does not know what is going on, and therefore, if a trick fails, a magician can ease on to another trick, and most of the time they do not know a mistake was made," he said.

Like most magicians, de Saint Erne has an assistant. Jocelyn Jenab, junior in biology, has been working with him for approximately a year.

"I enjoy working as an assistant to Nicholas," she said. "I am learning how to perform magic tricks. I am not as skilled at it as Nicholas, but hopefully I will be able to perform a magic show as skillfully as he does. I get a big kick out of waiting for the show to start and watching the audience's reactions and responses.

DE SAINT ERNE and Jenab incorporate the traditional magician's trick of making a rabbit appear into their act in a traditional

In this trick, de Saint Erne has a black scarf that he forms into the shape of a rabbit. He takes the scarf and puts it into a big dollhouse and makes a black rabbit appear. He then puts the rabbit back into the dollhouse and Jenab appears in its place in a black rabbit costume.

"While I am in school, I don't have a place to keep my rabbit because in the apartment complex where I live they don't allow pets. Therefore, it stays in Wichita. But next year, I hope to have it in school with me. I have been using him since 1976," de Saint DE SAINT ERNE has performed nationwide at various shows, seminars and conventions to keep his repertoire of magic acts current and to exchange ideas with other magicians.

"I travel around the midwest going to magic conventions and performing shows," de Saint Erne said. "Last summer I went to Evansville, Ind. to the International Brotherhood of Magicians (IBM) convention and to the Midwest Jubilee convention in Kansas City. The Mid-America Magicians Conclave was held in Wichita in May of 1980 and some of the best magicians were there such as David Copperfield."

DAVID COPPERFIELD and Doug Henning have two different styles of magic. They have added imensely to magic, and have helped create an awareness for it. Magicians have a better chance of succeeding because of the exposure the profession has been given by Copperfield and Henning. It is becoming an accepted form of art, like dancing and acting, according to de Saint Erne.

"If a magician performs a lot, it is not important to practice," he said. "When I am going to add a new trick to my show I have to practice a lot. Some tricks I can work on for a few hours and master them. Others can take years. It's the first learning that takes the longest time."

In addition to learning new tricks as a magician, de Saint Erne also invents different magic tricks that are introduced to other magicians.

"I invent tricks and sometimes sell them to othe magicians at conventions," he said. "I invented a magic trick called the 'IBM Cardputer'. It is in Japan and a couple of other countries across the world. It is a prediction trick where a computer card predicts a card a person pulls from a deck of playing cards. I just wrote the rules to the Chinese Linking Ring trick which is now being published."

DE SAINT ERNE is affiliated with a number of magic clubs and works in a magic shop during breaks from school.

"I am a member of a magic club in Wichita which is affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Magicians. It is a world-wide organization composed of magicians. We have monthly meetings where we exchange ideas and explore new forms of magic. There is also a magic club in Manhattan called 'The Wizards of Oz'. It is affiliated with the Society of American Magicians, founded by Harry Houdini in the early 1900s," he said.

DE SAINT ERNE has also used his magical talent to perform on TV talk shows and in commercials.

Despite the notoreity of television and appearing before audiences, de Saint Erne said he doesn't want to become a professional magician.

"I would not like to do magic as a professional because it would become a serious occupation for me, rather than something that is fun," de Saint Erne said. "To do it as a profession would become more of a pressure and it would take some of the pleasure and satisfaction out of it."

Actors struggle for fame, achieve deceiving results

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

Andy Warhol once stated that in the future, every person would be famous for at least 15 minutes of their life. Although society has not quite reached that level of "future shock," the desire for fame is deeply rooted in many people.

Alan Parker has assembled a group of young unknown actors and taken the scenario of of New York's celebrated Performing Arts High School to chronicle the road to fame.

The film begins with the auditions and focuses on eight students through their four years of school. "Fame" explores their joys, fears, hopes and sorrows.

Reaching for the goal of fame can often have deceiving results, as the movie points out. Parker utilizes his editing and camera work to capitalize on these deceptions. Several times we are led to believe that a person is alone when he is actually speaking with others. The implication seems to be

The experiences range from Ralph Garcia (Barry Miller)—a young Puerto Rican comedian who dreams of picking up where Freddie Prinze left off-to Paul McCrane's role of an aspiring actor who lives with the label of being homosexual.

Occassionally the story dips into episodic melodrama, but for the most part the script brings back the pains and joys of adolescence. The difference is that these students are faced with the extra pains and joys of having their talents overlooked or

The music, which enjoyed some success on the radio, is so much stronger within the context of the story and choreography that it evokes different moods altogether. Irene Cara delivers the vocals in such a manner that she has established herself as a star to be reckoned with.

Above all, "Fame" is a joy. It is a film that is as endearing as it is entertaining. It's no wonder it came from relative obscurity and rose to being one of the most talked about films of last summer.

Play teaches lessons of strength words of James Baldwin, author of the "Amen Corner," describe the discovery Sister Margaret makes in the play.

The Ebony Theatre production of the Amen Corner, played Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre, portrays the story of a womans search for herself.

Sister Margaret (Deborah Marshall), is the soulful, evangelical preacher od a black church in Harlem. She continually urges the congregation to pray to the lord. Throughout the course of the play, however, the congregation begins to believe that Sister Margaret is not so holy herself.

"The Amen Corner" has some outstanding moments. The gospel singing throughout is a joy to experience. The voices of Joseph Simmons and Gloria Lewis are both moving and rejoicing. The outbreaks of shouting and dancing by the congregation are spontaneous and comical.

The set was absolutely delightful. It was pleasurable to view a new backdrop in the Purple Masque Theatre. The use of levels by designer Perry Lee was also atypical of the usual Masque set, and created a place the audience could believe exsisted. Saxophone work 'smooth' on new 'Winelight' album

Collegian Reviewer

It's always exciting to crack open a new jazz album. It's almost guaranteed there will be some superb musicianship and artistry within. Granted this is sometimes the case with other types of albums, but a jazz LP is a little special. The main thrust is music and it shows.

Collegian review

From the front and back covers, to the music in between Grover Washington Jr.'s new LP "Winelight" is simplicity, but quality all the way.

The front cover shows a touch of elegance with sunlight filtering through a glass of white wine. Simple, but class. I know the old cliches,"Never judge a person by the color of their skin," and "you can't tell a book by it's cover," but this jazz LP is different.

There are only six songs on the album, but they're all long and good. Side one contains a dedication to Jules Erving called "Let It

By PETE ECKHOFF Flow." Like Dr. J's work on the court, smooth effortless and magnificent, so is Washington's saxophone work on this track and all the others.

> The hit single from the LP, "Just the Two of Us," features Bill Withers on vocals. If you enjoy the three-minute radio version," you'll really enjoy the seven-minute cut on the album.

> As with the majority of jazz albums, a cast of thousands (it's corny, but it sounded good) helps Washington out. Steve Gadd on drums, Eric Gale on guitar and Richard Tee on keyboards are just a few of the jazz greats contributing on "Winelight."

> The over-all sound is mellow and laid back. Great music to study to, dine with, read by, and just about anything else you like to do with nice music in the background.

Jazz enthusiasts should really enjoy "Winelight" by Grover Washington Jr. and if you have never delved into the world of jazz music, give it a try. A jazz LP is dif-

What really goes on in a big city hospital emergency room? How do parents at a PTA meeting deal with the idea of adding sex education to a school's curriculum? What is life like in the newsroom? These questions and others are answered by "The Second City," an improvisational comedy group.

The Chicago based group will demonstrate their rapid-fire comic commentaries at 8 tonight, in Forum Hall. The traveling group, sponsored by the Union Programming Council, is on a nationwide tour, and is performing at many college campuses.

Seven actors, a music director and a stage manager will perform material based on previous improvisations, Joyce Sloan, associate producer of "The Second City,"

"All the material is satirical review-all behavior comedy," Sloan said.

The group has never had anyone sit down and write a show for them, she said. The

"The whole show is set with the exceptions of two improvisational games," Sloan said. "You may see material that was created by John Belushi."

Belushi's first job of acting was with "The Second City." Other actors, such as Alan Alda, Gilda Radner and Joan Rivers also got their start from the comedy group.

The Wildcats and Jayhawks resume their series at Frank Myers Field with Big 8 conference doubleheaders on Saturday and Sunday. Both twinbills begin at 1 p.m.

KU leads the historic series which began in 1900, 123-97.

Going into action this weekend, K-State is seeking its first league victory. The 'Cats, 21-13 overall, are 0-4 in Big 8 play. KU is 13-8, 1-3 in league play.

The 'Hawks, perennial first-division Collegian Reporter finishers in the league race, are expected to present a challenge to K-State, especially when the 'Cats are at bat.

> "They've got a good ball club," coach Dave Baker said. "They've got a good pitching staff and they're sound defensively.

> Comparing the two teams by statistics, the 'Hawks have the edge on the pitcher's mound. KU has a team ERA of 3.68, K-State pitchers have combined for a 6.14 ERA.

> At the plate however, K-State enjoys an advantage. The Wildcats have hit at a .308 clip, compared with the Jayhawks' .281. KU leads in home runs with 18 in 21 games, K-State has 15 in 34 contests.

Baker has decided the four pitchers who started the games at Missouri will also start against the Jayhawks. The order of appearance has not yet been established

The starting four right-handers are Doug

Able (1-2, 5.19), Mickey Fleeman (1-2, 7.99). Mike Johnson (2-2, 6.29) and Louie Trujillo (2-1, 3.96).

KU coach Floyd Temple will start two right-handers Saturday and come back with two southpaws Sunday. Kevin Clinton has been chosen for the first game of the series. Clinton is 2-1 with a 3.12 ERA.

The second game starter for KU will be Jim Phillips, a winner over K-State last year. The sophomore is 3-1 with a 4.33 ERA.

On Sunday, KU will start freshman Dennis Coplon who sports a 4-0 record and 3.33 ERA. Randy McIntosh (0-2, 4.70) will start the series finale.

The Hawks' pitchers will face five Wildcat regulars with batting averages over .300. Only three Jayhawks are above that magic number.

Purple Pride can't run that deep

How do they do it? Year after year, how do they talk kids into going to Kansas State and taking their football lumps? How do they convince the players that this is going to be the year of the long-awaited turnaround? How do they convince 'em that if they play their guts out Saturday, this could be the day of the big upset?

Questions tumble through your mind as you watch yet another Kansas State team being pounded to oblivion.

This is an excerpt from Wally Provost's (writer for the Omaha World Herald) column entitled "A Greater Mystery Than the Pyramids."

K-State being pounded to oblivion, now that's as common as baseball, hotdogs and apple pie.

Each year football season rolls around and each year the fans sit back and watch their Wildcats try to battle it out with the Kansas Jayhawks for last place in the Big 8. It's tradition.

TRADITION. Along with the 'Cats getting obliterated on the field, it's also tradition the fans get a little annihilated in the stands. Maybe the drinkers have the secret to being able to endure the 15-minute quarters though, but how do the players stand it?

I mean "purple pride" runs deep in the hearts of all of true K-Staters but to get knocked to oblivion weekend after weekend—it's got to be hard to t purple pride can only run so deep.

Well maybe it runs deeper than I think, maybe the team enjoys losing and being the target of ridicule of writers who get to write only about their winning teams-but I doubt

There has to be a reason why players keep strapping on their helmets in 90-degree weather, there's a reason they'll risk the chances of severe knee injury and yet still another that keeps the coach out on the field swallowing the lumps with his team.

1, hit, hit, hit, hit, hit, hit, 5/2

IT'S ATTITUDE. The obnoxious fans, normally clad in red suits and driving red vans, at Nebraska and Oklahoma just don't have the same concept about football as K-Staters do. They only think of winning. But winning isn't necessarily the key to everything, at least for K-State's team.

"I really believe in life you're a loser if you think you're a loser," coach Jim Dickey said. "Sometimes you accomplish things far greater."

"When you win, you don't always win." So what's important at K-State, is not whether you win or lose-it's how you play

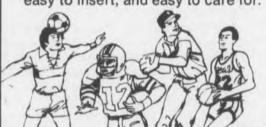

The problem then Mr. Provost, isn't K-State's losing record—it's your attitude and the attitude of all the Husker and Sooner fans who are used to seeing their teams win.

Had you experienced the twinges of purple pride, you'd accept the concept used for K-State football. You'd be so conditioned to losing that your philosophy wouldn't be win, it'd be "it's not whether you win or lose-it's how you play the game."

'Cats take full crew to Texas; Parrette set to go after injury

K-State's men's track team will hit the year ago because of a pulled hamstring. cinder this weekend with almost a full crew as they travel to the annual Texas Relays in

The 1981 version of the Midwest Relay circuit (which includes meets at Texas, the University of Kansas and Drake) began Thursday, but most events are scheduled for Friday and Saturday.

"This is the biggest crew we've taken in awhile because a lot of people deserve to go," coach Mike Ross said. "Everyone is way above the qualifying mark."

Field event competition should be the 'Cats strong point this weekend because of the past performances by these people.

The Wildcats' triple jumper Vince Parrette, who captured the triple crown last season, should help K-State along this weekend. So far this season though Parrette hasn't been able to reach his distances of a Leading the Wildcats are three other field event athletes who have turned in outstanding performances so far this season. Ray Bradley, who won the Big 8 Indoor title in shot put, has been showing his versatility in the discus by setting a school record of 196-51/2 at the Arkansas Relays last weekend.

Doug Lytle, the freshman pole vaulter who captured the Big 8 Indoor crown, has vaulted 17-0 so far this season. Joe Bramlage, the 'Cats javelin thrower, has thrown 246-11 so far and should add to the Wildcats depth in the field events.

"These aren't the only people who could win the crown in their event," Ross said. "However, according to their early performances, they probably have the best chance."

Leading the hit parade for K-State is outfielder Glynn Perry with a .387 average. After Perry are first baseman Joe Goedert (.380), shortstop Antonio Triplett (.356), outfielder-catcher Don Grause (.322) and catcher Dan Linden (.301).

Perry and Triplett also lead the club with 29 RBIs. Each has 13 stolen bases—tops on the team-as K-State has outrun its opponents 67-27.

Offensively for KU, third baseman Russ Blaylock leads all hitters for both teams with a lofty .410 average. In addition, Blaylock, who has swatted eight home runs so far, supplies most of the punch for the Jayhawks.

Backing him up in the lineup are second baseman Roger Riley, who is hitting .362,

Weekend sports

The K-State men's golf team ended the day with a score of 331 in the first day of competition in the Park College Invitational held in Kansas City.

The second round of the 20-team tournament begins today, with another 18 holes

George Furney, who finished the day with a 78, is the leading scorer for the Wildcats.

After Furney, Jon Carlson shot an 83. Greg Higgins and Todd Herrington closed the first day of competition with 85.

The 20 teams, from Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska, had a rough first day after battling high winds.

"Under the conditions, I wasn't disappointed," coach Ray Wauthier said. "The course was dry, hilly and the wind was 40 miles per hour. Looking at all those factors, the kids didn't do bad."

Wauthier also said another problem was the team had never seen the course before. "We're in the middle of the pack,"

Wauthier said. "We hope to improve...since we played the course once."

Softball

A busy weekend of softball gets underway for K-State today when the Wildcats begin play in the Southwest Missouri State Invitational at Springfield, Mo.

The women, 6-8, open action in the 17-team pool play tournament at 8 a.m. against Minnesota. They will then take on Oklahoma State at 1 p.m., followed by a 5:30 game against Stephen F. Austin.

The tournament is divided into four pools, with the winner and runner-up of each pool advancing to the championship round Saturday. All other teams will play Saturday in the consolation bracket.

"It's going to be a very tough tour-nament," coach Charlotte Michal said. "Most of the teams involved are Division I schools."

Men's Tennis

The K-State men's tennis team travels to Emporia today and Saturday for the Emporia State Invitational Tournament.

The tournament, made up mostly of NAIA schools, will be a positive step in competition for K-State, according to coach Steve Snodgrass.

"We did well last weekend against the junior colleges and our chances of doing well again are good," Snodgrass said.

There will be 14 teams competing in the 28-bracket tournament which has one school's No. 1 seeded player matched against another school's No. 1 seed.

Women's Tennis

The K-State women's tennis squad will be host to Emporia State University Friday at 1:00 p.m. as K-State plays its first matches of the spring season.

"We look pretty good," coach David Hacker said. "We've got a different spirit and attitude. We've got five players who could all take the No. 1 position.'

Playing No. 1 singles will be freshman Tammie Peugh, and Brenda Bennett will fill in the No. 2 spot. Candy Gwin and Kathy Manning will take the No. 3 and 4 positions.

Newcomer Chris Brisch, a Johnson County Community College transfer, will be in the No. 5 position.

"Chris is excellent," Hacker said. "She has a beautiful stroke-probably the best of anyone on the team. What she needs is competition to reach her height. She won't get it this spring, but by her junior year she'll be a dynamite player."

Doubles action teams up Manning and Gwin as No. 1 while Peugh and Brisch take the No. 2 doubles spot. Bennett and Sherry Nelson will pair up for the No. 3 position.

The 'Cats have a good chance to win, Hacker said. "We're probably a little bit stronger than Emporia."

Paxson's injury may be costly for Blazers in tonight's contest

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Kings, considered by some to be the weakest team in the National Basketball Association playoffs with playmaker Phil Ford sidelined, can clinch a miniseries triumph over Portland Friday night with a victory over the Trail Blazers in Kemper

The Kings, who finished the regular season with a 40-42 record, seized a surprising 1-0 lead in the best-of-three series with a 98-97 overtime victory in Portland Wednesday night.

A third game, if necessary, will be held Sunday in Portland. But the Blazers, in addition to being down 0-1, may also be without Jim Paxson, who suffered a sprained toe minutes into Wednesday night's game. Team officials were uncertain if he would be able to play Friday.

Ford, the Kings' star point guard, is still out with an eye injury. Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said he definitely will not be available against Portland.

THE LOSS of Paxson has weakened the Blazers defensively.

"It came down to this," said Portland Coach Jack Ramsay. "Kansas City deserved to win."

"I know Jack well enough to know he won't use Paxson's injury as an excuse," Fitzsimmons said. "But that had to hurt them. Paxson was their most consistent player all season, and he plays great defense against Otis Birdsong."

Birdsong, guarded by Michael Ray Bates, led the Kings with 29 points.

But the one mistake made in the first game that Ramsay never wants to see again came at the end of the overtime period when the Blazers failed to call a timeout to set up

Birdsong's jump shot with eleven seconds left fell into the hands of Portland's Calvin Natt, who started to launch a fast break but pulled up and passed to Kermit Washington.

WITH TIME EXPIRING, Washington launched a three-point goal attempt that missed, and Natt's follow shot also missed.

"I can understand one or two forgetting." said Ramsay. "But all five players?"

The Blazers came into the miniseries on a hot streak, winning 16 of their last 22 games. "Their home court advantage is worth a lot more than ours," said Fitzsimmons. "We don't have 12,666 standing up for an ovation every time someone moves. This win just means we have taken an important step in this series." The tipoff is scheduled for 7:05 p.m.

Royals make cuts

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Kansas City Royals Thursday cut eight players from their major league roster, including eight-year veteran infielder Jerry Terrell.

Terrell was placed on waivers for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release. He may be claimed by any other club in the next 24 hours.

Six players were optioned to the Royals' farm club in Omaha. They are pitchers Gary Christenson and Jeff Twitty, catcher Jim Gaudet, infielders Onix Concepcion and Tim Ireland, and outfielder Dan Garcia.

Pitcher Dave Wehrmeister will be assigned Friday.

The cuts leave 10 pitchers, three catchers, eight infielders and five outfielders on the

One more cut must be made to reach the April 10 opening day limit of 25 players. Terrell spent five years with the Minnesota Twins before coming to Kansas City

Haig's actions create concern from abroad

LONDON (AP) - The controversy over actions of Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. after President Reagan was shot has touched off concern and criticism abroad and could undermine his authority as he prepares for his first extensive foreign mission.

This surfaced in private comments of officials and in media treatment of Haig's statement, "As of now, I am in control here in the White House." He made the statement after the attempt on Reagan's life Monday.

It came after the naming of Vice President George Bush to head a crisis management team, a move widely seen as a rebuff to Haig.

Some Europeans also have been troubled by the fact that foreign policy pronouncements came from a widening number of Washington officials, and not Haig alone as he is seen to have wanted it.

HAIG HAS a substantial backlog of goodwill in Western Europe where his four years as North Atlantic Alliance commander gave him an intimate understanding of European attitudes and

But his image among some Arabs in the Persian Gulf on the eve of his Middle East trip beginning Friday has evidently been tarnished.

The concern, significantly, has not reached the point of public statements by officials. Arab officials declined to discuss Haig publicly, insisting on anonymity, but some said his image was hurt by his conflict with Bush and his statements after the Reagan shooting.

One official of the United Arab Emirates said: "We have yet to know for certain if Haig is the U.S. policy-maker or if he'll end up being an errand boy for Bush or the American defense minister.'

THE OFFICIAL Kuwaiti thought is that the events made U.S. ability to muster a strong policy on gulf security highly

In Saudi Arabia, sources close to the royal family said Haig will be "given the cold shoulder" when he visits there.

Thailand's Prem receives air waves for radio broadcast

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) - Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda appeared to be winning the battle of the air waves Thursday against Gen. Sant Chipatima and other leaders of the bloodless coup. Thailand's popular king fired the rebel officers, and they decided not to venture beyond Bangkok where their forces were reported outnumbered 2-1.

Prem, who fled the capital with the entire royal family after the coup started early Wednesday, continued to broadcast orders and appeals for support from his military stronghold in Korat, 150 miles northeast of Bangkok.

Although Sant's rebels controlled Radio Thailand in Bangkok, several stations owned by the navy and other government departments broke away from the state network and relayed Prem's broadcast from Korat.

A Bangkok rally called by Sant also fizzled when only about 1,000 people showed up. Some were there for a kite show scheduled for the same time, and others carried transistor radios broadcasting messages from Prem.

One of Prem's broadcasts said former Prime Minister Kriangsak Chomanan was appointed to mediate the crisis and that he shuttled to Bangkok after an audience in Korat with King Bhumipol Adulyadej.

Meanwhile, forces loyal to Prem were reported to have dug in along the main highway at points 55 miles and 80 miles northeast of Bangkok, and two of Prem's jet fighters buzzed the building where Sant's Revolutionary Council met.

Sant told a news conference his forces will be content to dig in around the capital. He said they will maintain defensive positions and not venture beyond the metropolitan area.

The independent Lebanese daily AL Bayraq said, "Alexander Haig, after the controversy over his powers in which he waved his resignation and then withdrew it, does not come to the Middle East the same powerful man capable of making decisions, especially in matters of foreign policy and sometimes internal policy."

In Cairo, the media reported the Haig controversy without comment. The Egyptian minister of state for foreign affairs, Butros Ghali noted: "We never discuss this. This is an internal affair."

IN WEST GERMANY, the newspaper General Anzeiger said: "Bonn fears a leadership vacuum in Washington."

The paper said the government and political parties see Haig as "the most important guarantor for a coordinated global policy which takes European interests and ideas into account."

The conservative London Daily Telegraph said Haig's performance, including his "emotional claim...that 'I am in charge here,' has prompted questions about his conduct in office...

London's Financial Times said, "Technically, Mr. Haig was quite right, but, maddeningly for his own reputation and typically, he mis-stated the justification."

Downtown businessmen express skepticism

City Editor

While the downtown redevelopment project has generated much discussion-over the past two years, there are many small businessmen who are still uncertain about what will happen to their concerns if a mall is eventually built.

If the construction of the mall proceeds at the designated site, 65 businesses will have to be relocated, according to Gary Stith, city planner.

City officials have held several meetings with the businessmen involved in an effort to inform them of what will happen.

The two main questions the businessmen want answered are how much they will be paid for their property and where they will be relocated.

"We've asked questions and gotten a lot of generalities," said John Farrell, owner of Farrell TV and Electronics at 215 Poyntz.

OFFICIALS have discussed relocating businesses "south of the downtown," Stith said. Also, some local developers have expressed an interest in putting together some space that could be used for relocation, he said.

Several business owners who

By MICHELLE DUELL would have to relocate have expressed their concern.

> "At the present time, I have a lot of mixed emotions," Farrell said. Farrell said he doubted the possibility of being relocated south of downtown.

"Right now I sit on Poyntz Avenue and if you were a new student in town, you could probably find me," Farrell said. "It's my understanding where they want a high percentage of the businesses to move is in the area of 3rd and 5th (streets) between Pierre and Yuma."

IF HIS BUSINESS were relocated to that area, Farrell said he doubted it would be easy to find and could result in financial losses.

Farrell said he has asked for information about how much he'll get paid for his property and so far that information hasn't been forth-

"I'm not asking for a rockbottom figure. My guess is that at some point in time they've (city planners) already made an estimate to figure how much all this is going to cost down here," Farrell said.

Farrell referred to the city's application for an $8 million Urban Development Action Grant, which would be used to help purchase property and relocate the businesses.

According to Stith, an appraiser made an estimate of the properties which would have to relocate "on a half-block by half-block basis." But until appraisals of the businesses themselves were made, Stith said he would not quote an estimated cost.

"What happens if appraisers estimate more than $8 million?"

Farrell asked.

FARRELL SAID he was afraid the appraisers would be under pressure to estimate property under the $8 million figure.

"I have a lot of misgivings about the situation," Farrell said. "I don't look to make a ton of money from these people coming in.

"Do you take property away from one individual and give it to another to make more money off the thing?" Farrell asked.

To appraise the property, the city appoints two appraisers and one review appraiser to inspect the property and make an estimate. Stith said. When the value of the land is set, the city makes an offer.

President 'cautions' against interventi

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan sent Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev a message concerning the Polish crisis last Friday, ad-ministration officials said Sunday. The message reportedly cautioned against a Soviet intervention in strike-torn Poland.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "There was a message sent from President Reagan to President Brezhnev on Friday evening. As far as the contents are concerned, I can't characterize it."

Administration sources, who asked not to be named, confirmed that the message did deal with the Polish-Soviet question, although they declined to be more specific.

NBC news reported Sunday that a senior administration official said the message warned sinst a Soviet military intervention The message was said to be the first from Reagan to Brezhnev devoted to the Polish crisis.

NBC said the message did not refer to possible arms sales to China as a consequence of an in-tervention, although the network reported the message cautioned of long and wide-ranging

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Saturday in London that Soviet intervention in Poland could prompt the United States to sell weapons to China.

Tight-lipped administration officials spent Sunday keeping a close watch on the Warsaw Pact maneuvers in and around Poland, and U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick warned that a Soviet intervention "would profoundly upset"

U.S.-Soviet relations.

Weinberger noted that Brezhnev's appearance at a Communist Party congress in Prague "shows the seriousness of the situation" in Poland. But he said it was good the Soviet Union was consulting with other Warsaw Pact nations.

If the owner does not agree with the estimate, he may go to court, in which case the judge would appoint an appraiser and set the value of the property, Stith said.

Should the owner not agree with the final offer, the city would file suit in court to acquire the property through an eminent domain proceeding, according to in-formation from the city planning office.

Before condemnation could take place, however, the owner would be notified.

ANOTHER BUSINESSMAN who would have to relocate is Doug Long, owner of Mel's Alley at 113 S. 3rd and Mel's Tavern at 111 S. 3rd. He agreed with Farrell and said relocated. he has asked direct questions and "gotten evasive answers."

Steve Nelson, part owner of Bob's Glass Shop at 115 S. 3rd, said his business is not the kind of business the city wants in the area.

"We do agree something needs to be done downtown. It's just what the city wants to do about it," Nelson said.

"If they put us in an industrial park, we'd never survive. We'd go broke," Nelson said. One owner said he wouldn't mind being

"I think it seems perfectly obvious that the good customer-drawing businesses are leaving downtown and the pool halls are moving in," said Dick Swanson, owner of Swanson's Bakery at 225 Poyntz.

Swanson said he finds it hard to believe that as much as he enjoys playing pool, those businesses are not what the downtown needs to attract business.

K-State to host model congress

Collegian Reporter

Almost 200 students from about 25 high schools will participate today in the first Model Congress Day at K-State, coordinated by the Department of Political Science.

"The model congress will be a replication of a formal legislative session," said Jane Sweeney, temporary assistant professor of political science. "The students will participate as members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. They will elect presiding officers and function under the same parliamentary procedures and rules that the United States Congress does. They will then debate resolutions of national importance that they themselves wrote and submitted."

Sweeney is a member of the coordinating committee of the project. Other members are Orma Linford, Merlin Gustafson and Naomi Lynn, associate professors of political science and Joseph Unekis, assistant professor of political science.

"The idea of the model congress came up as a way to bring students that were interested in politics here to K-State, give them an oportunity to see the campus and have an opportunity to debate," Sweeney said.

EACH FACULTY MEMBER and graduate student in the political science department will be involved in judging the speakers and coordinating the events.

"This is really an overall departmental effort," Sweeney said. "By combining the experience of the faculty, we knew what we wanted to do with this thing."

An invitation was sent to every high school in Kansas, asking if any students would be interested in participating in the day. A registration form was then sent to the schools and any student who wanted to participate could put his name in for candidacy for president of the senate or speaker of the house. The students were also permitted to submit a resolution, based on a current topic, to be debated during the legislative sessions, she said.

The legislature will convene at 9:15 this morning and will then hold the elections. At 10 a.m., the groups will break into committee meetings and the first legislative session will be at 11 a.m.

DURING THE afternoon legislative sessions, beginning at 1:30, anybody who wants to watch the process is welcome, she said. The Senate will meet in the Big 8 Room and the House of Representatives will be in the Little Theatre, Sweeney said.

At 5 p.m. there will be an awards ceremony in the Little Theatre. Engraved gavels will be presented to the speaker of the house and president of the senate. Trophies will be given to the outstanding speakers, judged by the political science faculty, and a trophy will be presented to the school with the overall outstanding delegation, she said.

Each participant paid a $2 registration fee to cover the cost of printing and mailing materials. The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club and Manhattan banks contributed money to buy the trophies and awards.

Civil rights leader visits Reagan

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, running an intermittent fever and showing traces of particles in his damaged lung, conferred briefly Sunday with Vice President George Bush, who described him as "fully on top of the situation" in Eastern Europe.

The president also met with Vernon Jordan, the civil rights leader who also was the target of an assassination attempt.

The particles discovered in Reagan's wounded left lung are "most likely...either dried blood or damaged tissue" that reflect normal scarring and debris, said Dr. Dennis O'Leary. They were found in a series of chest X-rays taken Sunday morning.

"We don't believe this is out of the ordinary," said O'Leary. But he added: "We'd rather it was clearing."

"It sure hurts to get shot," the president said, echoing a comment he made earlier in the week when he told visiting senators, "I found out it hurts to get shot."

Jordan, according to Fischer, replied, "It hurts like hell. It hurts like hell."

NATO meeting may focus on Poland

BONN, West Germany — This week's meeting of NATO ministers, billed as Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger's European diplomatic debut, may become another crisis session on Poland, NATO officials said Sunday.

The meeting Tuesday and Wednesday is a regularly scheduled session of the Nuclear Planning Group, defense ministers from the 13 North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations who gather twice a year to review strategic policy.

But NATO officials preparing for the session said the escalating crisis in Poland was likely to replace the usual long-term defense planning as the dominant agenda topic.

The meeting will be the first cabinet-level consultation between the NATO allies since December, when the alliance warned the Soviet Union that any moves to intervene in Poland would have grave consequences for East-West relations. It also is the the first NATO ministers' meeting since the alliance began working in secret on a series of responses to be taken if the Soviet Union intervened in Poland.

The White House announced after telephone discussions between President Reagan and key allies last week that Western financial aid plans for Poland would be halted if the Soviet Union intervened. A consortium of Western nations is currently trying to help Poland refinance its $25 billion foreign debt.

Prime minister returns to Bangkok

BANGKOK, Thailand — Thailand's royal family and Prime Minister Prem Tinsulandonda returned to Bangkok Sunday, two days after an attempted coup by rebellious generals was crushed by troops loyal to Prem.

More than 100 officers involved in the revolt were under "temporary detention," military sources said. They included all the senior officers who took part in the coup except its leader, Gen. Sant Chitpatima.

A government report that he had fled to Burma could not be confirmed.

Prem, who fled to the northeast Thai army base Korat when the coup was launched early Wednesday morning, said Saturday that the captured coup leaders would be treated fairly and tried by a military court. Those who took part in the rebellion but returned to barracks before Thursday evening would be pardoned, he said.

The prime minister flew into Bangkok later Saturday, then returned to Korat.

Police arrest suspected terrorists

MILAN, Italy — Police said Sunday they seized Genoa professor Enrico Fenzi on Saturday along with Italy's most wanted terrorist suspect, Mario Moretti. Investigators said both men are believed to be top leaders of the Red Brigades, the nation's most feared urban guerrilla group.

Police said the arrests leave only one Red Brigades leader at large—Moretti's girlfriend, Barbara Balzarani. They also said Moretti's capture is the most important blow to the Red Brigades since the arrest of the group's founder, Renato Curcio, in January 1976.

Two other Red Brigades leaders, Vincenzo Guagliardo and Nadia Ponti, were captured in Turin last December.

Moretti, sought by police since 1972, is believed to have been the "mastermind" behind the kidnapping and murder of five-time premier Aldo Moro in 1978.

Weather

A contest guaranteed to boggle the creativity of nearly everyone could be formed by the city fathers to describe downtown redevelopment in 25 words or less. Of course, these essays could turn out to be windier than today's weather. High in the low 70s.

Unproductive squabbling

Student Senate members who are claiming unfair representation in the Senate should abandon their cause and concentrate on more important issues.

Some senators are arguing that greek students dominate the Senate and action should be taken to make representation even among the living groups.

Arguments for such action are weak, at best.

Senators are elected by the student body. If the greek houses are effective in mobilizing their members to vote, then they should be commended for creating an interest in politics—not condemned for achieving something the residence halls and off-campus students have not been able to do.

While it may appear unfair that greeks dominate Student Senate, it is no less fair than the fact that millionaires dominate the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

Such squabbling over representation will only create tension between Senate members at a time when it's extremely important to work together to make budget decisons and to decide whether to go forward with the coliseum.

Control creates prey...

Editor,

I read Paul Stone's editorial and Glen Benteman's letter with great interest. Both gentlemen spoke of "gun control" when, in fact, they meant "people control." Guns are not trotted off to prisons, individuals are. As a libertarian I am opposed to all victimless crime laws.

If by simply owning a gun, you haven't aggressed against another person, then the State has no right to restrict your ownership. Gun control is immoral—not because the Constitution guarantees the right to keep and bear arms, but by virtue of man's most basic natural right—that of self-defense.

Benteman pointed out that the crime rate in Washington, D.C. rose following the inactment of the handgun ban. The phenomenon (which can be demonstrated on a nationwide basis) is not just a coincidence. Gun control laws effectively disarm the private citizen making him easy prey for any criminal with or without a gun.

before pushing it any further.

Having been through the experience more than once in my lifetime, I still can only classify myself as one of many in this lousy world qualified to speak on, and permanently haunted in a way that many around me will never understand, by rape.

I am outraged by the group "Women Against Rape" (because I am not a member, I am for it?) which proclaims itself to be helping the "cause" of all women and men by its secretive meetings, scare tactics and now, a "Women take back the night" march April

I sincerely urge all in this community to boycott this march for the following reasons.

—"WOMEN AGAINST RAPE" professes to be striving to increase public awareness of "the incidence and implications of rape."

Point: Despite publicizing announcements of meetings in Campus Bulletin, and yet the group has excluded some of my acquaintences from their meetings and planning sessions according to their discretion.

Point: Men are not allowed at the meetings. What are you afraid of, ladies? Are you not willing to acknowledge that those men you call bastards are not also sexually abused by other men? Do they have nothing to contribute to the "cause"?

Point: A group which supposedly wants to heighten public awareness has banned both male and female reporters from both KSDB-FM and the Collegian from its meetings. The reasons given, according to the Collegian reporter, was that the leaders of the group wanted to have "it" all planned out before the press got ahold of "it." P.R. doesn't work that way, folks.

Point: The leaders of the group have, to date, refused to be quoted on the record with their names. Why? That helps to INCREASE public awareness?

—THE GROUP professes to be striving to increase public awareness of "how rape is dealf with by victims, police, courts and society at large."

Point: Many victims, despite protests by the media and groups like this one to the contrary, are still scorned, their lives further destroyed by the insensitivity of "the police, courts, and society at large." Marches don't solve the problem. Friends and support groups are supposed to.

Point: I have seen no effort to date by this group to increase public awareness on this point, or to work with "police, the courts or society at large" to help them to understand the problems of the victim. Why not develop an informational network in cooperation with the Fone and the Regional Crisis Center of rape victims and counselors which would be available to police and defense attorneys to consult?

—THE GROUP professes to be striving to increase public awareness on "what can be done to work toward the elimination of rape in our neighborhoods."

Point: A group which holds its meetings secretively does this? A march does this? The action taken must be from a positive stance. For instance, it was suggested to me that perhaps Manhattan in cooperation with the campus police and RCPD could institute a system like that in Johnson County, where concerned students and professors working late on campus and those in town could put signs outside their front doors or classroom buildings and leave their lights on, which would signify that if someone felt threatened they could ask for help there.

-THE GROUP professes to be striving to increase public awareness about "the need for women to report rape and testify."

Point: It's not just a question of the philosophical nobleness of civic duty, and the emotional stress created thereby. It takes money to go through the courts. The justice system in this country dispenses justice for the rich.

By the time a woman is through paying off hospital expenses—which can total in the thousands for just one day—recovery expenses like counselors and medications, moving expenses if that's necessary, and factoring in time off from work, can we assume that in all cases it would be in the best interests of the victim to prosecute an iffy (as all rape cases are), case? Hey folks, why not develop a fund for rape victims?

I realize that you may not wish to deal with the practical, unidealistic, un-noble aspects of the aftermath, but if somebody doesn't, the woman deals alone.

THERE ARE things that can be done—positive things. But they take time, forethought, real concern and organization.

Marching through the streets like a bunch of paranoid idiots—"demonstrations of concern," as the flyer puts it—are hardly going to do the trick. It will most likely engender hostility, especially in this community.

Marches are the easy way out. Really working to eliminate rape takes far more committment and consideration than "Women Against Rape" has shown its willingness to give.

Editor,

Editor,

I have read with some interest that the Kansas State Legislature has taken a negative attitude this year toward cost of living increases for K-State faculty members. The faculty seems to be taking this action very meekly.

Having lived in the San Francisco area, I find the faculty attitude somewhat puzzling. In San Francisco the city street workers and bus drivers are, on the average, paid more generously than K-State faculty members—the difference being that the workers out there are unionized. Why is there so little interest in forming a union among K-State teachers?

Players' image bad

During the All-University Open House I gained some insight into the funding problems K-State continues to have with the Kansas Legislature. The program for the Talent Showcase stated that the Not-Readyfor-K-State-Players had appeared before the Legislature on three different occasions.

If that is true, then the joke in on the Legislature for appropriating any money at all to K-State.

I am assuming that the Players' performance was representative of their usual presentations. I'm hoping that I'm wrong and that the Showcase spectacle was the exception rather than the rule.

Humor helps...

RE: Paul Stone's editorial about who shot

I agree with him-partially. I feel it was wrong for the business to post the sign, at this time. It was inappropriate for them to put up the bulletin so soon after the attempt on the President's life. That is inexcusable.

I don't feel, however, that what the business was trying to do was out of line. Laughter can relieve the tension in people and help get their minds off of the atrocity committed. And it helps them to cope with the situation. The business was trying to use laughter as a release mechanism, helping people get rid of some of the hostility. Laughter helped me through some hard times, almost as tragic as the attempted assassination of President Reagan. I'm glad the business tried to get our minds off the tragedy. I'm sorry they chose to do it so soon after the terrible incident.

Editor,

In order to protect "F-State's" student population from potential disease, I am forming a group of concerned students whose goal will be to see that the student rag finds its rightful place at the bottom of the heap (more specifically the garbage dumpster). The repugnant humor of the April 1 issue of the Collegian (Chickenhawk) would surely cause an outbreak of hemorrhoids if it were allowed to be used as a replacement for scarce toilet paper as suggested.

"F-State" could even see an outbreak of a new disease form if immediate action is not taken. To this end I would warn students to be very careful when handling the rag and never under any circumstances leave it where an innocent victim might come in contact with it. Furthermore, I would suggest that the Collegian print in bold letters the words,"HANDLE WITH EX-TREME CARE," on each and every future

In closing, it would be presumptuous to think that this paltry humor deserves such a prominent place as the floor of the bathroom

The Talent Showcase, held in conjunction with the Open House, should be a general audience presentation reaching out to parents and prospective students alike. The Players' activities did anything but that. The nearly complete lack of class, taste, intelligence and creativity was not only appalling, but detracted from some good performances by music groups on campus.

Also disturbing is the implication that the Players regularly represent the University at high schools and colleges throughout the state. Surely the image they projected during Open House is not the image we want to project. The Players certainly don't represent me.

Cheerleaders take 2nd; perform with celebrities

Performing amidst a star-studded cast of celebrities, the K-State cheerleaders achieved a certain amount of fame and glory over the weekend as they took second place in the International Cheerleading Foundation's national cheerleading com-

Held in Miami at the Fontaine Bleau Hilton, the cheerleaders' performance was taped for a national televison appearance in which they competed against five other schools, including Ohio State University, which placed first in the competition.

At the taping, the cheerleaders made appearances with celebrities such as Victoria Principal, who plays Pam Ewing on "Dallas," and singer Andy Gibb, said cheerleader Kelli Kerr, sophomore in clothing and textiles. Appearances were also made by The Beach Boys, dancer Julia Prowse and performer John Davidson.

The team's captain, Lamont Ross, senior in political science, and squad member Richard Lytle, freshman in chemical engineering, could not perform because of injuries. Alternates Scott Case, senior in architecture, and Kermit Rainman, freshman in general, filled in with just a few practices to help finish in second place.

The weekend was more work than play as the competition required much rehearsing and retaping on the hotel's beach, Kerr said. Though the group was able to sit around the pool, it was on call during the whole weekend as it awaited its chance to perform.

Marchers remember King

SELMA, Ala. (AP) — More than 5,000 demonstrators urging Congress to extend the U.S. Voting Rights Act joined together Sunday and marched to the Edmund Pettus Bridge, where blacks seeking the right to vote were bloodied by state troopers in 1965.

The march also commemorated the death of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who led the milestone Selma-toMontgomery march after a first attempt to cross the bridge was halted by clubswinging troopers.

Sunday's march was peaceful, with black police and deputy sheriffs helping provide security.

"This is holy ground," said civil rights leader Jesse Jackson of PUSH (People United to Save Humanity) as marchers streamed out of a local church and paraded through downtown Selma to the bridge. Many linked hands and arms as they

Some conservative Southern congressmen have suggested that the 1965 act not be renewed when it expires in 1982. The act opened polling booths to thousands of blacks across the South. It places strict federal controls on state and local rules which had made it nearly impossible for blacks to vote in significant numbers.

Shuttle officials begin count to launch date

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - Space agency technicians worked to eliminate a short circuit deep inside the engine of America's first space shuttle as officials readied the Sunday midnight "call to stations" that begins the five-day countdown to launch.

The countdown, long-awaited after years of shuttle delay, is a painstaking process that starts as workers power up the orbiter Columbia and ends with the computers' silent command: "Fire."

Ignition-"blastoff"-is scheduled for 6:50 a.m. Friday, propelling astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen into space for 36 orbits and 541/2 hours.

"The launch team will continue to troubleshoot the electrical problem" while the countdown commences, an official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Sunday.

The malfunction on a "pogo" suppression valve posed some uncertainty Sunday but launch director George Page said at midafternoon Sunday that the countdown would proceed on schedule at 11:30 p.m. EST.

The trouble developed early Sunday while engineers were clearing the shuttle engine systems with helium gas. One of the two valves designed to minimize launch vibrations popped open for no apparent

The soundness of the valve was not in question.

The problem was a short circuit in a wire between between a control box and the valve, a space agency announcement said in late afternoon. Technicians were wiring the valve to the same load controller assembly that was operating the other valve properly.

Because of the problem, some of the launch crews were assigned to work through the first 8-hour scheduled "hold" period, a rest period built-in so such catch-up work can be performed.

The valve got its nickname, pogo, during the Gemini manned space program when the Titan 2 booster rockets developed testflight vibrations because of the fast-flow of fuel through its lines. It reminded engineers of the up-and-down action of a pogo stick.

Concern that the vibrations would prevent the crew from reading their control dials during liftoff, NASA developed valves to slow the fuel flow.

The first flight of the shuttle already is two years behind schedule, a delay caused by development of the vehicle's engine and the tiles it needs to protect it from the 2,700 degree heat of reentry. The shuttle is designed to be launched like a rocket, orbit like a satellite and land like an airplane. It is the first space vehicle designed to be used again and again.

"We're in Selma because means are still being used to keep blacks off the books," Jackson told more than 1,000 people crowded into Brown Chapel A.M.E. Church. "The same fox who used to kill the chickens remains over the henhouse."

Outside Brown Chapel, a rallying point for voting rights protests in the 1960s, thousands of black spectators joined the ranks of marchers under brilliant blue skies.

The 1965 law was passed in large part on the momentum of the Selma-to-Montgomery march, a 50-mile trek that drew the attention of the nation as it culminated with a rally on the steps of the Alabama Capitol in Montgomery.

Commissioner claims memo misused

Advertisement creates opposition

Collegian Reporter

An advertisement printed in The Manhattan Mercury on Sunday containing a memorandum about the financial impact of downtown redevelopment on USD 383, prompted city officials to call a special meeting with members of the school board.

The ad was paid for by the campaign committees for city commission candidates Suzanne Lindamood, Henry Martin and Larry Morgan.

The memo contained in the advertisement was written by James Benjamin, superintendent of USD 383, at the request of school board member Frank Tillman, answering some questions Tillman had about the effects of the downtown redevelopment on the school district.

BENJAMIN'S MEMO said the school district could lose $5,486,400 if a downtown mall were built.

According to the memo, a $40 million shopping center would be legally assessed at 30 percent, which would mean a tax valuation for tax purposes of $12 million. However, if tax increment financing were used, the valuation of the downtown area would be frozen at $850,000, the memo said.

City commissioners, after being informed about the ad, called a special meeting Saturday morning with Benjamin and Martha Miller, president of the school

By RHONDA SHIDELER board, to discuss the memo, which was to be published Sunday. Martin and Morgan also attended the meeting.

Lindamood, who along with Martin and Morgan oppose the downtown mall, said the assumptions made by Benjamin were reasonable. She said state law set the assessment at 30 percent.

A line at the bottom of the ad was dropped without her knowledge, Lindamood said. She said it was supposed to say, "As your city commissioners, we will see that the city commission will inform you of these costs."

RUSSELL REITZ, one of four city commissioners who attended the special meeting Saturday, said Benjamin told him the information in the memo was only hypothetical and the figures were unrealistic.

He said that as he understood, the information was given to Tillman only because he requested it. The memo was to be circulated only to school board members.

He also said the information about the 30 percent assessment was untrue. The assessment would be one-half or even onethird of the 30 percent, Reitz said.

"We consider it unfortunate that the memo written by Benjamin was used as it was used," Reitz said.

Reitz said that he happened to be at the newspaper's office on other business

"minutes after the Mercury received the information" about the advertisement, and he was asked what he thought of it.

AT A RECENT school board meeting, Tillman brought up the subject of the effects of downtown redevelopment on the school district, including funding and possible loss of revenue, but discussion was tabled.

Tillman was asked for information about the mall and its effect on the school district, he said. He then requested the information from Benjamin.

Tillman said he believes any citizen has the right to know information about the school board.

"The distortions are by people wanting to push one side or the other," Tillman said.

Morgan also said Benjamin was only doing what he was supposed to be doing-releasing requested information. Morgan said he was at the school board meeting when the mall was discussed and Tillman told him the memo was a public document. He said the candidates thought the public had a right to know about it.

Two things Morgan said upset him were that the meeting Saturday was not made public, and the information about the ad was released before it was published.

I believe in:

the Downtown Redevelopment Concept, but support the position that local property taxes should not be increased for this purpose without giving citizens the opportunity to vote.

Motorcyclist voices dislike for parking circumstances

As warm weather approaches, many students are leaving their cars parked at home and are riding motorcycles to campus. This may sound like a good solution for those who have problems finding stalls on campus, but motorcyclists are having problems parking too.

One student who was a victim of the lack of motorcycle parking is determined to start a campaign to open more parking for this purpose.

In about two weeks, Robert Tyrell, sophomore in computer science, said he plans to begin circulating a petition which will be submitted to the Traffic and Parking Committee, asking them to examine "the problem of scheduling and allocation of space to motorcycles."

Last week, Tyrell found his motorcycle, parked in one of the areas designated for motorcycle parking, knocked over. Several other nearby vehicles had also fallen over. About $160 in damage was done to Tyrell's motorcycle.

With more parking space given to motorcycles, Tyrell said he thinks the damage decrease.

There are 15 areas designated around campus to park approximately 650 motorcycles that have been registered with Security and Traffic, said Richard Herrman, Security and Traffic patrol officer.

There is no limit on the number of motorcycle parking permits that Security and Traffic will issue, said Andrew Amaro, Security and Traffic patrol officer. The number of vehicles that can fit in these areas varies because there are no lines in many of the areas to show how the motorcycles should be parked and there are no limits to the size of motorcycles that can be

"Some of these lots don't have parking lines so they just all clutter in," Amaro said. Many motorcycles are being parked in the grass and under trees near the parking areas because of the overflow of motorcycles in these areas. The motorcycle areas are cement, leaving black-topped pavement for cars only. When heat forces the tar on the black top to become soft, the kick stand has a tendency to melt into the pavement, causing the motorcycle to lose its balance and fall, he said. Damage is done to the cycle that fell, any surrounding vehicles and the pavement,

Motorcycles parked on campus must have a sticker from Security and Traffic. Stickers cost $5 and are good until August, Herrman

Americans dine with royal couple

LONDON (AP) - Americans are lining up for Britain's latest tourist attraction-lunch with the Earl of Spencer, father of Prince Charles' fiancee Lady Diana, and tea with her stepgrandmother, best-selling romantic novelist Barbara Cartland.

Cartland, 79, whose more than 300 romantic novels have sold 100 million copies around the world, says she devised the tours with a New York travel firm before Charles, 32, heir to the British throne, and Lady Diana, 19, announced their engagement

"We're getting a lot of stick about it now, but the idea was first mooted two years ago," Cartland said in a telephone interview from her 400-acre home at Potters Bar, 15 miles north of London.

"I wasn't very interested at first as I'm very busy. But I agreed because the tourists are coming by (state-owned) British Airways, and I'm very patriotic.

"I'll just be having the Americans to tea, so that won't be so bad," said Cartland.

The first group of 12 Americans, reportedly paying $1,540 each for a seven-day tour, arrive April 27. Further tours of 25 people are scheduled through the summer by the travel firm, World of Oz.

Female alcoholism remains taboo

By GLADYS JACKSON Collegian Reporter

Treatment of women alcoholics is less strict than for men alcoholics because women are often ignored or misdiagnosed, according to Jean Kirkpatrick, founder of Women for Sobriety, a self-help program for women alcoholics. Society, therefore, must not be lenient in dealing with women alcoholics, she said.

Kirkpatrick was the keynote speaker Saturday for the second in a series of conferences on alcohol issues coordinated by the Riley County Council on Alcoholism and Drug Education (RCCADE).

In her speech, "Turnabout: Help for a New Life," Kirkpatrick noted the differences between men and women alcoholics.

Jean Kirkpatrick

Researchers, though evidence is limited, have found several differences between male and female alcoholics, she said.

One difference occurs in the courtroom. In the court system, judges are lenient on women alcoholics, Kirkpatrick said, and this only adds to their problems.

"The judge slaps her on the hand and a lecture is given rather than a sentencing," Kirkpatrick said. "Overlooking it isn't doing her a favor. You must confront her and give her some reason or some way she can get help."

WOMEN ALCOHOLICS attempt suicide more often, however, men alcoholics are usually more successful with suicide attempts.

"Women alcoholics don't want to die. They are saying they need help, 'notice me'," Kirkpatrick said.

Although women alcoholics are pleading for help, Kirkpatrick said many of them aren't being reached.

Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) is the most successful program available for alcoholics to date, but only 3½ to 5 percent of five million women alcoholics get to AA, Kirkpatrick said.

The federal government funds 35 programs for women alcoholics which are targeted to reach 17,000 women, but Kirkpatrick is doubtful about this figure.

ONE REASON women alcoholics aren't being reached is that women are often misdiagnosed as psychiatric patients instead of alcoholics, she said.

Kirkpatrick said she was admitted to a private hospital and diagnosed by a psychiatrist as a schizophrenic, not an alcoholic. When released, Kirkpatrick said she was still an alcoholic and was also addicted to other drugs.

Dual addiction is a frequent problem for women alcoholics. Between 73 to 88 percent of women alcoholics are addicted to the tranquilizer Valium, she said. Female alcoholics are often difficult to deal with, Kirkpatrick said, and physicians often just prescribe another drug to quiet them.

"The next best thing is to put them on tranquilizers and keep them sedated," she said.

WOMEN IN SOCIETY are viewed as "pure and sweet," and it's difficult for society to accept women as alcoholics, Kirkpatrick said.

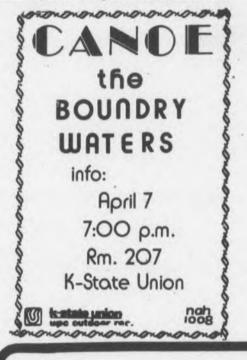

"In this culture we can't say 'she's an alcoholic' and provide help." she said.

alcoholic' and provide help," she said.

Kirkpatrick said she believes it's not unusual for families to deny the alcoholism problem. Then, once alcoholics say they need help, the situation has been revealed and it becomes humiliating for the family, according to Kirkpatrick.

Researchers have found that when working women who are alcoholics are discovered, they are overlooked or fired. However, when men alcoholics are discovered on the job, they're usually told to "straighten up," advised to get help or help is provided, Kirkpatrick said.

WOMEN ALCOHOLICS who are fired from jobs to receive treatment aren't given needed job training, she said, because the staff of most treatment centers doesn't believe job training affects alcoholism.

Kirkpatrick cited a New Jersey treatment staff of 25 men and nine women—only 25 percent believed that lack of job training pertained to alcoholism. However, 98 percent of women alcoholics said lack of job training was one of the main causes for them to drink after being released from the center, Kirkpatrick said.

The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism have found 50 percent of all alcoholics have at least one alcoholic parent.

For women it's almost invariably the father, Kirkpatrick said, and this woman then marries a male alcoholic.

"Feminism is more than Just a Bunch of Girls."

Byrd commends handling of crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd (D-West Virginia) said Sunday the administration's handling of the crisis surrounding the shooting of President Reagan "was about as good as could be done."

"I could not fault the administration in any way," he said.

Interviewed on CBS' "Face the Nation" program, Byrd said he does not believe the shooting and subsequent sympathy for Reagan would affect votes by Congress on the economic package of budget and tax cuts Reagan has proposed.

Byrd repeated his criticism of the timing of overseas trips by Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

He said it was "bad judgment" for them to be out of the country while the president is convalescing and fears remain about whether the Soviet Union will intervene militarily in Poland.

"We have been given every reason to believe that an invasion may be imminent," he said, adding that in such a case the president's top advisers should be close at hand. N.Y. Festival of Women's Films

In recent years, he said he has seen more urban students register in the College of Agriculture and LAR is their first opportunity to show an animal.

LAR is in its 53rd year, Farmer said. It originated in 1924 as Farmer's Day for the College of Agriculture. Activities included a parade of student-groomed animals, from the barns to Waters Hall.

"That was when the college was a more demonstrative one," he said. "The college would put on programs to demonstrate new ideas to farmers.

In 1928, the Division of Cooperative Extension took over demonstration of new agricultural techniques and Farmer's Day was no longer necessary, Farmer said. Because the students enjoyed preparing the animals for the activities, they wanted to continue and the LAR was started, he said.

K-State takes 3 of 4 from Jayhawks

Collegian Reporter

For the avid baseball fan, the four-game weekend series between K-State and Kansas was something to behold.

There was some good pitching, some good defense and some good hitting, especially by the Wildcats.

K-State coach Dave Baker called the series against the Jayhawks a "great team effort.'

Taking three out of four from their intrastate rivals, the Wildcats swept Sunday's doubleheader by scores of 8-2 and 9-8. The two teams split a twinbill Saturday, K-State winning the first game 2-0 and losing the second 8-3.

The Wildcats, despite out-hitting KU 13-9, scratched and clawed to win the second game Sunday, scoring the winning run in the bottom of the sixth inning and retiring KU in order in the seventh.

K-STATE WASTED NO time jumping on Jayhawk freshman Dennis Coplen in the first inning. Craig Danforth led off with a single and took second when KU's rightfielder Joe Heeney bobbled the ball. He. moved to third on a single by Glynn Perry and scored on a sacrifice fly by Antonio

The Jayhawks came right back against K-State starting pitcher Louie Trujillo in the top of the second inning. After retiring Russ Blaylock on strikes, Brian Gray singled. Trujillo then struck out Heeney and gave up a single to Roger Riley, sending Gray to second. Tim Heinemann was hit by a pitch to load the bases and Gray scored when Danforth mishandled a smash off the bat of Kent Shelley. Trujillo ended the threat when Dick Lewallen took a called third strike.

K-State responded with a single run in the bottom of the second inning. Designated hitter Kent Schaede reached on an error by Jayhawk shortstop Jeff Neuzil, went to second on a ground ball hit by Dan Linden, and scored on a single by Brian Barlow.

THE WILDCATS EXTENDED their lead to 4-1 in the bottom of the third inning. Danforth led off with a double and scored on a ground rule double by Perry. Perry then scored on a single by Triplett before Coplen retired the next three.

In the fifth inning, however, KU cut the lead to 4-3. Designated hitter Kevin Clinton walked and took second on a single by Blaylock. The bases became loaded when Danforth fumbled a ball hit by Gray and lost starter Randy McIntosh, 0-3, who pitched the chance for a force. Heeney received an only two-thirds of an inning. Four Jayhawk RBI when Gray was forced at second and Riley lined a single for the other run.

THE WILDCATS MATCHED the Jayhawks in the inning to move ahead 6-3. With two out, Coplen walked Goedert. The next batter, Don Grause, hit a grounder to Blaylock, who threw wildly over first base, putting runners on second and third. Schaede made KU pay dearly as he singled home both runs.

An offensive explosion by KU ensued as the Jayhawks batted around in the sixth inning. Lewallen began the rally, reaching first on an error by Barlow. After a force at second, four consecutive singles tied the game, 6-6, and sent Trujillo to the showers.

Riley greeted reliever Jim Ferguson with a single on the first pitch to give the Jayhawks a 7-6 lead. Pinch hitter Juan Ramon delivered the final run with a sacrifice fly to right field.

The Wildcats retaliated against Coplen and three successors, scoring three runs on five hits. With one out, Rob Golden singled and took second on a single by Danforth. That ended the stint of Coplen, who was relieved by losing pitcher Mike Watt.

PERRY SMASHED A pitch to the fence in right-center field for a triple scoring both runners and giving the Wildcats an 8-8 tie. Perry held at third on a infield out and KU coach Floyd Temple brought on southpaw Jerry Freeman to face Goedert, a left-Temple's strategy backfired, however, because Goedert delivered the gamewinning run with a single to right.

The win went to Ferguson, 3-2, in relief as he retired KU in order in the seventh.

The first game victory went to Mickey Fleeman, 2-2, who pitched a complete game six-hitter. K-State tagged the loss on KU errors in the opening frame helped the Wildcats score four times.

Danforth led off the inning with a single and went to second on a single by Perry. A single by Triplett knocked in Danforth and, when Heeney let the ball get by him in right field, Perry scored and Triplett went to third. Triplett scored when Goedert lined a shot at the KU first baseman who dropped the ball for an error. Goedert later scored on an error by the third baseman.

FLEEMAN, WHO ALLOWED only six hits, gave up single runs in the second and seventh innings. At one point he retired 11 consecutive Jayhawks before a leadoff triple in the sixth. Even then, Fleeman did not allow the run, retiring the next three on

On Saturday, the first game of the series was a pitcher's dual won by K-State's Mike Johnson over KU's Kevin Clinton. Johnson, 3-2, pitched a two-hit shutout. Clinton, 2-2, took the hard luck loss although he gave up only three hits.

The lone Jayhawk victory came against Doug Able, 1-3. KU scored four times in the second inning to take a 4-1 lead and never looked back. Jim Phillips, despite allowing 10 hits, picked up the win.

Kings win series; Houston eliminates champs

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Forward Reggie King scored 20 points in the second half and dominated play inside as the Kansas City Kings downed Portland, 105-95, Sunday to eliminate the Trail Blazers from the National Basketball Association playoffs.

The Kings beat the Blazers twice in Portland to win the best-of-three miniseries, two games to one, and earn the right to meet the Phoenix Suns in the semifinals of the Western Conference playoffs.

Kansas City, in winning its first playoff series since the franchise moved to Cincinnati in 1972, led by as many as 12 points in the fourth quarter before the Blazers managed a final run.

Portland sliced the lead to three, 96-93, on a driving basket by Kelvin Ransey with 1:34 to play. But Sam Lacey hit a 10foot bank shot and King scored on an offensive rebound to put the game out of reach.

The Blazers, who haven't won a playoff series since 1977, shot out to a 15-point lead, 41-26, early in the second quarter. But Kansas City outscored Portland, 23-7, over the last eight minutes of the first half to take a 49-48 halftime lead.

Rockets, 89 Lakers 86

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Houston Rockets upset defending National Basketball Association champion Los Angeles 89-86 Sunday to win their opening playoff series two games to one, holding last year's hero, Earvin "Magic" Johnson, to just 10 points.

Johnson scored only two field goals and six free throws, and it was his miss with five seconds left that preserved victory for the Rockets.

Houston led at the end of each period, although the fourth stanza surged back and forth.

After being tied at 85-85, the Lakers went ahead on a Johnson free throw, but he missed two of them.

Mike Dunleavy threw in an 18-footer, sending the Rockets ahead 87-86 with 15 seconds left. Johnson dribbled up court, kept the ball and then badly missed a 10foot jumper.

76ers 125, Bucks 122

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Julius Erving scored 38 points, including a pair of game-winning free throws with 38 seconds remaining, as the Philadelphia 76ers defeated the Milwaukee Bucks 125-122 Sunday in the first of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association Eastern Conference semifinal playoff series.

The Bucks, Central Division champions, led 122-121 with 53 seconds remaining after a field goal by Sidney Moncrief.

Milwaukee's Quinn Buckner, however, then fouled Erving. He made his first attempt, tying the score 122-122, missed the second, then dropped in the penalty shot, sending Philadelphia ahead.

The 76ers' final two points came on a pair of free throws by Lionel Hollins, who was deliberately fouled with 11 seconds remaining as the Bucks desperately tried to get the ball.

Celtics 121, Bulls 109

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird and Kevin McHale ignited a third-quarter burst that broke open a tight game and propelled the Boston Celtics to a 121-109 win over the Chicago Bulls in the opening game of their Eastern Conference National Basketball Association semifinal playoff series.

Bramlage wins javelin at Texas but rest of team does little

Senior javelin thrower Joe Bramlage came away with the only first place finish for the K-State men's track team last weekend at the 54th annual Texas Relays in Bramlage, the 6-3, 215-pound native of Marysville, fought off the swirling Texas wind and the tradition of years of second-place K-State finishes to beat a strong field of competition with a throw of 250-3. It was just off his personal best of 251-3 and was his longest throw of the season.

Another K-State javelin thrower, freshman Donnie McKinnis, had some bad luck, failing to qualify for the finals after watching a throw of 235 feet get blown out of the sector.

K-State received another strong performance from freshman long jumper Veryl Switzer. Switzer tied his non-windy personal best of 24-7 for third. Ray Bradley continued to be bothered by a troubled hamstring which he injuried while running wind sprints for a pro football scout 10 days ago.

In the discus, Bradley wasn't able to duplicate his Arkansas Relays win as Iowa State's Scott Crowell won with a throw of 189-2. Bradley took eighth with a toss of 172-8. In the shot put Bradley recorded a throw of 59-1 3/4.

K-State's distance medley relay team took third with a time of 9:58.40.

Other Wildcats placing in the finals were Vince Parrette, fourth in the triple jump with a leap of 49-10; and pole vaulter Doug Lytle, who tied for fifth place with a vault of 16-2. No team scores were kept in the meet.

K-State will be back in action Saturday when it competes in the John Jacobs Invitational at Norman, Okla.

'Cats 4th at NU; Pihl 6th at Texas

K-State's women's track team split up last weekend, with some members going to the Texas Relays in Austin and others going to the Nebraska Invitational in Lincoln.

In Nebraska, the Cornhuskers took first with 139½ points. Kansas was second with 121, Minnesota third with 78½, K-State fourth with 52 and Missouri fifth with 22.

Wanda Trent was the only Wildcat to earn a gold medal by running a 57.0 in the 400 meter run.

The 400 meter relay team finished third, while the 1600 meter relay team came in second.

Coach Barry Anderson felt "both relay teams ran well" as neither team had been running in too many relay races.

Anderson said the "highlight" of the meet in Lincoln was in the javelin where Peggy Hopkins made a throw of 124-11 for second

In Austin, Deb Pihl took sixth in the 1500 meter run with a time of 4:34.0. Pihl was the only K-State participant to place in the Texas meet.

K-State All-American guard Rolando Blackman scored a team-high 13 points and grabbed six rebounds to lead the West team Saturday in the 10th annual Pizza Hut Classic at the Las Vegas Convention Center.

Louisiana State forward Rudy Macklin hit two free throws with 1:03 left to give the East the win.

Macklin's points completed the scoring. The West had several chances to tie the game in the final minute, but came up empty. Utah center Tom Chambers missed two shots from close range in the final 30 seconds.

Notre Dame's Kelly Tripucka, who was named the most valuable player for the East, added 13 points for his team. Also scoring in double figures for the winners were Wayne McKoy of St. John's and Elston Turner of Mississippi with 10 points each.

Blackman was aided by Wyoming's Charles Bradley, who had 12 points and was named the West's most valuable player. He also had a team-high five assists.

With the East leading 82-77, Blackman and KU's Darnell Valentine teamed up to make the finish interesting. First, Valentine hit Blackman with a pass under the basket for an easy layup at the 1:54 mark. Nineteen seconds later it was again Valentine setting up Blackman for a driving layup that resulted in a threepoint play to tie the game.

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) - Shortstop Mario Mendoza singled in one run and doubled home another Sunday as the Texas Rangers downed the Kansas City Royals 3-2 in exhibition baseball action.

Fox advocates animal, ag needs

Collegian Reporter

Animal welfare is an increasing concern in the United States and could have a significant effect on future livestock production and research, according to many agricultural leaders.

Proponents of animal welfare are trying to acheive a union between consumers who care about the rights of animals and the treatment they receive and the producers who want the right to produce as they see fit, said Dr. Michael Fox, veterinarian and animal welfare activist, Friday in Umberger Hall's White Auditiorium.

"Animals have interests, they have intrinsic worth," he said. "We (humans) are the ones who accord them the rights. They're already given rights under the law. The right to humane treatment under the Animal Welfare Act and the right to life of endangered species."

FOX, DIRECTOR of the Institute for the Study of Animal Problems, who considers himself to have a middle of the road philosophy on animal welfare, said he is not a vegetarian and does not believe that animals have the right not to be eaten. However, he said they do have the right to humane treatment.

During his presentation to members of the Kansas Swine Seminar, he showed slides to illustrate ways in which farm animals are occassionally mistreated in some systems of livestock production.

While there are some areas of the nation where animals can be raised in the field, Fox said he believes confinement will be the only way to raise livestock in the future. He predicted this because of rising land costs and the limited amount of agricultural land in the world.

"The evolution of farming systems represent in my mind, a second industrial revolution," he said, referring to the change from extensive free-range farming to feedlot and environmentally controlled confinement systems.

FOX SAID HE advocates allowing enough room so that farm animals can stand up, turn around, lie down, groom themselves and have social interaction with their own kind. This is especially true of pigs since they are curious, intelligent and social animals, he said.

Sixty percent of the sows in the country are in confinement, Fox said.

He discussed the production process of 'tethering"-confinement of sows with a band around the body behind the shoulders and attached to the floor or wall to keep the animal in place.

Although he said less than 1 percent of the sows in the United States are raised this way, animal welfare groups are concerned because more than 60 percent of the sows in Great Britain are rasied by the method.

ANOTHER SYSTEM he discussed was Animal rights bill receives support

There is an active movement in Congress to formulate an animal rights bill, according to Dr. Michael Fox, director of the Institute for Study of Animal Problems.

The bill currently before Congress is in two parts, he said. One part calls for establishment of a farm animal advisory council to encourage cooperation among animal producers, welfarists and the consumer. The second part would require a grade be placed on grocery products that would tell whether the animals used in the product have been raised humanely, he Fox said he would like to see the second part of the bill removed, but hopes the advisory board becomes a reality.

"What I would like to see is legislation to establish a farm animal welfare advisory council of industry, scientific and welfare representatives to articulate the issues, provide more funding for applied research in the area to help producers and animals," he said.

Although some of the faculty members in attendance did not agree with everything he advocates as animal welfare rights are simply good animal production techniques.

"By and large we are looking at a great percentage of people who take tremendous care of their livestock, because I think that good health and high performance go along with animals that are under the right conditions," said Calvin Drake, professor of animal science.

The bill proposed by animal welfarists or at least parts of it, have a good chance of being passed, he said. However, he expressed concern such laws can be worded so they would be impossible to abide by in actual production.

David Ames, professor of animal science and acting head of the Department of Animal Science and Industry, agreed.

"I'm not saying its going to change everything entirely or that it would be totally bad legislation or anything like that, but I don't think we'll go many years without finding some laws passed," he said.

one of confinement in a maze that kept the animals from social interaction with other pigs. This system was proving to be highly successful, he said.

However, Fox said the animals become more aggressive as a result of stress and boredom and often tail bite.

"It seems to begin sometimes as play behavior simply because there is nothing around the pens they can play with," he said. "It does cause significant economic loss (through infection of bitten animals and subsequent illness or death) even when tails have been docked."

Fox also criticized methods of poultry production where producers confine the animals to small cages and sometimes put more birds than need be in one cage. Or cages are stacked up to 8 feet high preventing frequent inspection of the birds.

"You're dealing with economies of scale and space," he said.

Slaughter is another major concern of animal welfarists, Fox said.

"The Humane Slaughter Act has done much to improve the handling and execution of stock," he said. But constant monitoring of slaughter houses is necessary to insure proper procedures are being used.

Haig emphasizes importance of Israel's security

JERUSALEM (AP) - Secretary of State Alexander Haig, seeking to calm Israeli fears over the sale of U.S. military equipment to Saudi Arabia, declared Sunday that Israel's security and well-being are "central to American policy in the Middle East."

Haig arrived here on the second stop of his tour of four Middle East nations. After meeting with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, he flew to Israel to confer with Israili Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Haig was in close touch with Washington throughout the day on events in Poland, U.S. sources reported.

He told reporters the situation in Poland "remains more tense than it has been. We've been watching Soviet military steps with growing concern."

Haig said he was "especially concerned about the increased level of Soviet risktaking" in the Middle East, "both directly and through proxies."

The secretary of state said he was here to discuss "the differences of the parties to the peace process and the current dangers facing this region."

Egypt and Israel are at odds over negotiations aimed at granting some form of autonomy to Palestinians who live in the occupied territories seized by Israel in the 1967 Mideast war.

Mahaffey releases results of grievance hearing associate professor of forestry, recently evaluation. released the results from his grievance hearing. Mahaffey also reported filing another grievance because of his dissatisfaction with conditions in the Department of Forestry.

In the results, the General Faculty Grievance Board expressed a belief that Mahaffey has not been the subject of harassment by two of his colleagues for the past 21/2 years.

The board ruled against Mahaffey in four of his six grievances against Thomas Warner, assistant professor of forestry, and Harold Gallaher, former head of the Department of Forestry.

Mahaffey filed the grievance in September; the hearing was in December. Because faculty grievance procedure states that contents of hearings are confidential unless the grievant approves their release, only Mahaffey could release the results.

"I had a feeling they were setting up to get me again this year, so I waited until I got this faculty evaluation before I released the results," Mahaffey said.

Mahaffey filed his most recent grievance

> THE RESULTS from the six grievances heard in December:

-Mahaffey said he received an unfair and biased 1979 faculty evaluation which resulted in an unfairly reduced salary merit

On Feb. 1, 1979, Warner replaced Mahaffey as teaching program leader. Following the replacement, Warner became responsible for teaching evaluations and made the evaluation which upset Mahaffey. The department head, at that time Gallaher, makes recommendations on merit raises.

Mahaffey contended he received a low rating in cooperation in areas of general performance and teaching performance because Warner and Gallaher dislike him and because of idealogical differences.

At the hearing, Warner and Gallaher reported student complaints against Mahaffey and said his hostility created dissension in the department. They said their evaluation was reviewed and approved by the dean of agriculture.

The board found the evaluation was from administrative positions

> -Mahaffey's third grievance claimed that Gallaher refused to submit to him public information about faculty evaluations and methods used for distribution of merit funds which would have helped him to further substantiate the first and second grievances.

> The board noted that Gallaher said the individual raise recommendations and contents of individual evaluations are confidential information. It supported the 1979 evaluation of Mahaffey's performance.

> -IN HIS FOURTH grievance, Mahaffey said a reduction from a 12-month contract to a nine-month contract to begin July 1, 1981 resulted from his being unfairly removed justified his 12-month contract.

The board found academic tenure ordinarily guarantees faculty members to teach on an "academic year," or ninemonth basis. Mahaffey has been granted academic tenure. It stated also that Mahaffey's previous 12-month appointments were assigned because of his heavy teaching, advising and program responsibilities.

The board said a letter from then Dean of Agriculture Carroll Hess indicated because of falling summer enrollments, the loss of his Natural Resource Management Committee (NRM) chairmanship and the shifting of administrative responsibilities, a 12-month teaching assignment was no longer justified. The letter also said to justify a 12-month assignment, Mahaffey would have to generate research.

THE BOARD recommended Mahaffey be sent a letter from the department explaining the reasons for the decision to remove him from his position of teaching program leader and chairman of the NRM. It recommended the letter spell out how his participation in the program and the Rules against playing on lawns to be more stringently enforced

The lawns of the K-State campus are off-limits to students who want to play. Students can walk on them and study on them, but are forbidden from playing on them.

Security and Traffic was netified March 25 in a letter from Tom Shackelford, grounds superintendent for University Facilities, to begin strictly enforcing a restriction which bans students from playing on most of the lawns on campus, said Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic.

"The guidelines come from them (University Facilities) and we just enforce them," Stone said.

Areas restricted from organized sports activities include the band practice field, the lawn in front of Anderson Hall and the Weber Hall

Officers who find students playing on the restricted lawns ask the students to leave, Stone said.

There haven't been any problems with removing students from the restricted areas, Stone said. However, names are taken and a written report is made in case of damage to the grass, he

Some fields are available for activities if a student receives written permission, Cross said. The field north of Durland Hall, the intramural fields, Memorial Stadium and the field south of it can be reserved, he said.

Students who want to reserve these areas fill out a form from Cross's office to request the use of the facilities, Cross said. It takes a few hours to determine if the area can be used.

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — An away from Soviet-style communist adviser to Solidarity counseled the orthodoxy. Warsaw Pact military maneuvers continued in and around Poland.

Polish Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, in France, was quoted as saying in an interview with the Paris newspaper Figaro that "the Soviet Union is the last country which would want to intervene in Poland."

In Britain, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said the recent buildup of Soviet military forces inside Poland amounted to an "invasion by osmosis" that has the same effect as an outright invasion in in-

Soviet President Leonid toward Poland, where labor Brezhnev was in Prague, Czechoslovakia, for that country's Communist Party Congress.

Czechoslovak party chief Gustav Husak declared at the Congress that Poland's leaders had failed to restore order in their country even after having conceded that Poland faced anarchy.

The Soviet media published long accounts of the Czechoslovak party congress and quoted Husak as saying that "enemies of socialism" in Poland sought to "engineer a counter-revolutionary coup in Poland."

At the same time, the Soviet news media seemed to relax its own criticism of Poland Monday, publishing instead a letter from a Soviet worker to members of the Polish party's Central Committee department will be affected.

The board recommended the department write a position description for Mahaffey and that his 12-month teaching assignment be extended through fiscal 1982. If Mahaffey's position description includes research and he is unable to obtain money from outside the University for research, the board suggested the téaching assignment be reduced to nine months.

Mahaffey said he was pleased with the ruling on this grievance.

-MAHAFFEY'S FIFTH grievance claimed, "For a period of 21/2 years, I have been subjected to harassment, false accusations and discriminations for exercising my Constitutional Civil Rights of free speech, thought and written expression. These actions have resulted in loss of deserved salary merit increases, office space, audio-visual equipment and the threatened reduction from a 12-month to a nine-month contract."

The board found moving Mahaffey to a smaller office after Warner replaced him as teaching program leader was accepted procedure. It also ruled that removing audio-visual equipment from Mahaffey's office and allowing it to be checked out does not constitute harassment.

It stated, "The Board does not support Prof. Mahaffey's contention that the actions described in this grievance were taken for the purpose of harassment."

-Mahaffey's final grievance stated that after his September 1980 grievance was filed, but before the hearing in December, Gallaher wrote him two "intimidating and threatening" letters. Mahaffey said Gallaher's threats were: "It now becomes necessary to use other means to resolve these problems" and "Any further action of the kind on your part will leave me with one alternative-to recommend dismissal."

THE BOARD stated the first letter referred to student complaints about Mahaffey and the second alleged "inappropriate actions" toward students and faculty members taken by Mahaffey during the fall 1980 semester.

The board expressed concern about using dismissal threats as a reprimand, but said the actions should be reviewed on their own merits. The timing of the letters was inappropriate, the board said, and recommended they be withdrawn from Mahaffey's personnel file.

After releasing the grievance results, Mahaffey reported filing the other grievance against Warner and Gallaher.

"I got a zero (merit increase) two out of three years. Zero means something is horrendously wrong with the individual," Mahaffey said.

Gallaher, who recently retired from the department, and Warner, say the evaluation isn't unfair or biased.

"I will be the first to admit that Dr. before the end of the school year.

Mahaffey has talent, but there are certain areas of his peformance that I simply have to put him less than acceptable," Warner said. "Everything in my evaluation is supportable; documentation is my only defense."

Mahaffey has said Gallaher's retirement won't affect his pending grievance.

Eugene Friedmann, chairman of the General Faculty Grievance Board, said the next grievance hearing will be sometime expressing the "firm conviction" that the party "is the only force capable of overcoming the country's labor crisis."

Last week, a spokesman for Solidarity said government officials raised the prospect of outside intervention during negotiations that halted a general strike threatened for last Tuesday.

Monday's statement by Olszewski, who advises Solidarity's outspoken Warsaw chapter, appeared to be an elaboration on this theme.

Olszewski said the beating of unionists by police in the town of Bydgoszcz on March 19 had been intended to provoke a general strike, which in turn would invite a Soviet intervention.

"Such a situation may repeat itself," he added, "and hence, other methods of pressuring the government than strikes must be found." There are no strikes in Poland currently.

Democrats release alternate budget

WASHINGTON — House Democrats unveiled their long-awaited alternative to President Reagan's economic package Monday, calling for a sharply smaller budget deficit in 1982, a smaller tax cut, less spending for defense and more for social programs.

It calls for overall spending cuts roughly $4 billion deeper than Reagan recommended, but does not assume enactment of the threeyear, across-the-board tax cut of 30 percent that is the centerpiece of the administration's economic recovery program.

Rep. James Jones (D-Okla.), chairman of the House Budget Committee, unveiling the package at a news conference, said it would produce a balanced budget in the 1983 fiscal year, a year earlier than the administration's own target.

"This is a budget which meets the needs of America," he said, calling on Republicans to "put aside partisan urges in order to swiftly pass this budget."

Jones was accompanied at the news conference by House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas and Democratic Deputy Whip Bill Alexander of Arkansas.

"I believe that the Democratic leadership is in support of this basic program," Wright said.

Haig blames Syria for fighting

AMMAN, Jordan — U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. blamed Syria Monday for the latest explosion of fighting in Lebanon and said it could have "most serious" consequences.

A senior U.S. official in the Haig party told reporters "great pressure" was building in Israel for Israeli forces to intervene on the side of the Lebanese Christians in their 6-day-old battle against the Syrian army.

"We are right on the brink, in my judgment, of a major outbreak in hostilities," said the State Department official, who asked not to be identified.

Haig flew to Amman Monday and met with Jordan's King Hussein after a 14-hour visit to Israel.

Reagan reverses auto standards trend

WASHINGTON — Halting more than a decade of increased auto regulations, the Reagan administration said Monday it will relax or eliminate 34 pollution and safety rules to help the troubled American auto industry.

The move will save manufacturers, who lost $4.3 billion last year, nearly $1.4 billion in capital investment over the next five years, the administration said. Auto and truck buyers would benefit by about $9.3 billion, an average of $150 per vehicle.

"The American automobile industry is in serious trouble," President Reagan said in a statement released at the White House. Administration officials said the industry incurred "unprecedented losses" last year and 180,000 auto workers are unemployed.

"The industry must solve its own problems but the government must not unnecessarily hamper its efforts through excessive regulation and interference," Reagan said.

The regulations to be eased or eliminated range from a rule requiring auto bumpers to withstand a 5 m.p.h. crash to various pollutant emission standards for cars and trucks. The administration also wants to eliminate fuel efficiency standards after

Scientists ready shuttle for launching

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Hundreds of technicians at Kennedy Space Center here and two nearly isolated astronauts in Houston were moving almost on schedule Monday to a common, revolutionary, goal: launch of a rocket ship able to go into orbit again and again.

The space shuttle Columbia, due to be launched on Friday, stood gleaming white in the all-night bath of powerful spotlights, as crews worked around the clock in a precision countdown.

By midafternoon Monday, the countdown was about three hours behind schedule because of two problems: a leaky valve in a gas line and a short circuit in the shuttle engines. But officials believed liftoff would come on schedule because there is time built into the schedule to handle just such problems.

The mission will mark the first flight of the first ship developed for multiple trips into space. The shuttles—there are to be at least four of them—are designed to fly about 100 times each with one engine replacement.

Go play in the street

The office of University Facilities has recently requested Security and Traffic to stringently enforce a policy concerning grassy areas on campus. The policy prohibits students from using the band practice field and the Weber Hall and Anderson Hall lawns for recreational purposes, and it allows use of the field north of Durland Hall only with written permission from University Facilities. Students without permission will be asked to leave by Security and Traffic.

Although the rock-dirt field north of Haymaker Hall will not be restricted, many areas that have long been used by students for recreation will no longer be available. The enforcement of the policy will leave many students with no area to participate in activities which require some open space, such as football or softball. The intramural fields east of KSU Stadium are in constant use from 4 p.m. until nightfall, and the City Park is usually congested with off-campus students and Manhattan residents. These areas are also farther from the campus and students without cars don't have immediate access to them.

While enforcement of this policy may improve the appearance of some grassy areas, perhaps University Facilities should consider student's needs before aesthetics.

Rape misconceptions

Editor,

I would like to respond to some misconceptions in the recent column by Damien Semanitzky. My major concern is her lack of research into the services already available to rape victims in our community.

Point: If a woman is a victim of rape and reports the crime to the police, the police will pay the hospital costs for the rape examination.

Point: If a woman is a victim of rape and decides to take it to trial, the victim does not pay for court costs. Rape is a felony and in felony cases the state pays for court costs. Nor does the victim pay for a private attorney as she will be represented by the county attorney.

Rape and fear of rape should be made public. By taking back the streets, women are making a public statement—we won't live our lives in fear and we have the right to walk down the street after dark without threat of rape.

Watching over morals

Editor,

RE: Tim Brown's letter about the Not Ready for K-State Players in Monday's Collegian. Other than the five minutes of uninterrupted laughter if brought into our lives, it has caused us to see the light and we have decided to suit the decent, moral, and upright individuals such as yourself in the public.

It was weighing heavily on our conscience, the damage we were doing by inflicting our brand of irreverent, if not immoral, humor on an unsuspecting public. In fact, we have been approached by members of the Communist Party in America who have promised us more drugs and illicit sex if we continue to attack everything that America stands for.

Thanks to you, we can all sleep better at night, secure in the knowledge that people like yourself are out there watching over the morals and tastes of those who really have no business deciding these things for themselves. God bless you, Tim Brown, and all you stand for Amen.

Greek comments unfair

Editor,

I was really shocked by Rob Altland's comments in Friday's Collegian concerning the uneven representation in student Senate.

While I'm sure that there are many parents who "foot the bill" for their greek-affiliated offspring. I know for a fact that many off-campus students do not pay for any of their college educations.

I agree with Geri Greene's comment that the reason there are more greeks in student senate is because more greeks run and more greeks vote. Granted, there are houses that give points to their members to vote, but I find nothing wrong with this. The more participation by any student, the better the entire system will become.

The way to improve Student Senate is not to degrade the people working within, but to promote interest and activity outside.

Putting the 'Express' back in the Pony

Has anyone ventured into that modern pony express system we call the U.S. Post Office since it invented the 18 cent stamp?

I did so twice in two days, only to find incompetence existed for the service which millions of Americans rely on every day—except Sunday.

My first trip was made late Friday night when I realized I had a bill that needed to get to Wichita as soon as possible. I have nearly half a roll of perfectly good 15 cent stamps so all I wanted was a perfectly good 3 cent stamp to get the payment on its way.

I arrived at the post office only to find that the stamp vending machine was out of order. So the payment could wait until morning—I could accept that. Or I could run all over town to the various convenience stores that maintain U.S. Postal Service ministations, but that would waste more gas than was necessary for mailing one letter.

Then I chose to go to the post office during its regular business hours. A quick and simple process. However, when I arrived at the middle of Manhattan's Saturday morning confusion, I found a long line. I waited...and waited some more.

There was some major remodeling done at the post office a few years ago when they decided that instead of having three or four long lines they would just make one. So a divider was built and now one must wait until a window is open to step to the counter.

As I was standing there waiting, I overheard the postal official on duty inform a customer of the resulting problems when the change was made from 15 to 18 cent stamps.

It was plain as day, the postal service couldn't issue a supply of stamps large enough to satisfy the public's demand and they want to make another increase. Heaven help us!

This is somehow ironic to me because postal officials in Washington, D.C. didn't get the postal budget to meet demands either. So rather than make any expenditure cuts they simply want to keep increasing the price of mailing a letter. And I should suffer?

It seems to me, that with modern technology at the state it is and electronics already playing an important part of our lives, we should be able to put the U.S. Postal Service out of its misery and save ourselves millions of dollars in federal postal subsidies.

We can already pay our bills by telephone.

Why not mass produce computers that would allow us to send bill payments, bills and even letters in a matter of seconds. There could be one for every household.

We could connect the terminals to our bank accounts and do away with checks or have payment vouchers printed by the receiver who could cash them in at a bank. Everything could function by code numbers.

There might be other benefits to a computer mail system. No more notices from the armed forces about how joining the service would be the best move of your life. Or for seniors on the college list, an end to the overwhelming notices from life insurance companies who want to protect your future if the price is right.

If we have to keep the postal service the way it is let's see some changes made.

Stop the Saturday delivery, it isn't really that necessary anyway.

Why not bring back the green storage boxes one used to find every few blocks and put the postman back on the street with his wheel around mailbag. Surely that would be cheaper than running 20 or 30 cars around town. They seem to function in the same capacity as the green boxes did years ago only the postman doesn't walk as much.

The service could also slow down mail movement. They could possibly make only one pick-up for any town with a population of 30,000 or less.

If people want to send a letter to a destination by a certain time, then there are many express mail systems operating as free enterprise systems which can be used.

Another possible solution to the troubled mail system is the overuse. If you can pay bills locally, then do so.

We also need to cut down on the junk mail that people would rather not receive anyway. This would include mass mail advertising or chain letters. Sunday newspaper supplements can be just as effective.

A final solution would be to leave it as it is and begin paying 25 or 30 cents to mail a letter, without any improvement to the already finacially troubled system.

Students gobble up first place with new wider header design

Collegian Reporter the past four years, the K-State project has

"Ole Gobbler."

It's neither a tom, nor a hen, but a 40-foot combine header.

Carrying a small model of the header, a set of plans and a 100-page report, five members of the K-State American Socity of Agriculture Engineers (ASAE) traveled to the ASAE Mid-Central Region Design Competition March 20-21 in St. Joseph, Mo.

Their project, "Ole Gobbler," placed first. "Ole Gobbler" provides three benefits over existing combine headers, said Tim Beougher, senior in agriculture engineering and chief engineer of the project.

Because "Ole Gobbler" is 40 feet wide, it increases the field-cutting capacity of the combine, he said. The largest existing manufactured header is only 30 feet wide.

IN ADDITION, "it can automatically fold from its 40 feet of cutting width to only 16 feet for road travel, making header removal for transport unnecessary," Beougher said.

The header can fold because it's divided into three sections: a 16-foot center section and two, 12-foot wing (side) sections, he

The wing sections can fold up or down 10 degrees during operation to improve cutting efficiency on uneven terrain, he said.

The ASAE team which designed "Ole Gobbler" originated in a design class for agriculture machines last semester, Beougher said. The class was divided into two teams and each was responsible for designing a project by the end of the semester. The team that won the class competition was eligible to take their project to the mid-central competition.

In addition to Beougher, the team members are Tony Lippert, Joe Pipoli, Karl Visser and Russ Bauck, all seniors in agriculture engineering.

EACH MEMBER had a special job in designing "Ole Gobbler," Beougher said.

Beougher said he wrote most of the report and Lippert worked with the basic design of the header and built the model. Pipoli processed the report from a departmental computer. Visser worked with the blue prints and Bauck worked with the hinging system design and stress analysis of the

"When we first began the project, we weren't sure if such a machine was possible, but due to hard work on our part, we were able to overcome each problem as it arose," Beougher said.

Each year, the top three projects in the Nicaragua forwards human rights concepts

By DIANNE DANNER Staff Writer

Nicaragua's ability to adapt to a broad view of human rights was the topic of a speech presented last night in Forum Hall by an American educator currently living in that Central American nation.

"One of the things about human rights in Nicaragua, that to me is really interesting, is that human rights is defined there in a broader way than is usual. It is defined as a positive thing you can fight for," according to John McFadden, the last speaker in the Lou Douglas Series, "Perspectives on Human Rights."

Traditionally, when human rights is discussed it is defined as civil and political rights, he said.

"The type of thing you're talking about is freedom of the speech, freedom of press, freedom of religon, the right to a fair trial and habeas corpus," he said.

NICARAGUA HAS accepted the policies of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and was the first Latin American country to establish a human rights commission, The National Commission for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights.

Nicaragua has expanded the United Nation's thinking on human rights to include economic and cultural rights.

Economic rights concern issues such as the right to a decent diet and to decent housing, he said.

Cultural rights are "the tools of education, the tools of thought, the tools of participating verbally in political discourse," he said.

These rights, as well as the traditional rights, are officially recognized in Nicaragua as "real human rights," McFadden said.

This "broader definition of human rights" is trying to be accomplished through an educational campaign across the country.

THE ILLITERACY RATE in the adult population under the Somoza regime was 50.2 percent, he said. The adult population is anyone 10 years or older.

The Somoza dictatorship, which ended in 1979, after ruling Nicaragua for 46 years,

McFadden disclaims U.S. view of country considered education of the masses a needless expense, according to a handout by The National Network in Solidarity with the Nicaraguan People.

When the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) overthrew the Somoza dictatorship on July 19, 1979, it designed a proposal for a National Literacy Crusade.

John McFadden

McFadden was a part of a group of six who were in charge of training the "brigadistas," the volunteer urban youth, who would spend five months living and working in the rural areas of Nicaragua teaching reading and writing skills to the peasant population.

SINCE THE SADINISTAS have taken rule, the enrollment of the university has doubled from 15,000 to 30,000, he said.

The illiteracy rate decreased to 12.96 percent by the program's end in August, he said.

"It's (educational campaign) part of what Nicaragua, in its own view of human rights, views as their effort of them doing the best they can fufill the promises of respecting human rights," McFadden said.

One of the issues of the traditional human rights area which is extremely important is the right of habeas corpus, he said.

"Basically what that means is that if the police pick you up they can't hide you, they've got to let people know where you are," he said.

"The extreme opposite of respect for habeas corpus is one of the most common, sickening, horrible things that happens in most of the countries in Latin America still, but doesn't take place in Nicaragua," he said.

MCFADDEN SAID he was curious why the United States is placing "economic harassment" on Nicaragua. Nicaragua is ecomomically oppressed and can no longer obtain loans from the United States, he said.

McFadden disagreed with statements relating Nicaragua as being "the Soviet model of Latin America" in the questionand- answer period following his talk. He also disagreed with reports that Nicaragua was transferring guns to El Salvador, because it "wasn't in the country's self-interest"

Leonard, KC near agreement

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Pitcher Dennis Leonard, a 20-game winner in three of the last four seasons, was reported near agreement Monday on a five-year contract with the Kansas City Royals calling for about $4 million.

Leonard, 20-11 last year, was quoted earlier this year as saying he would beome a free agent in the fall unless he reached agreement on a contract extension before the start of the season.

The Kansas City Star said in a copyright report from the Royals spring training site at Fort Myers, Fla., Monday that Leonard probably would not sign the agreement until after the start of the season. The story said Leonard, agent Jerry Kapstein and Royals vice president John Schuerholz have come close to the figure required to keep Leonard in Kansas City through 1986. The Royals' right-hander reportedly turned down a $3.4 million offer earlier this spring.

"The language about guarantees and stuff will have to be ironed out," Leonard said of the contract talks. "The main thing was to get together on a figure before the season started so I don't have to go through the season with negotiations on my mind.'

Leonard, who signed a five-year $900,000 contract in 1976 and since has seen baseball salaries skyrocket, told The Star he was seeking an amount "fair by today's

Cats resume busy slate

Coming off a heavy week of action, the K-State softball team resumes play today when it meets the University of Nebraska-Omaha at 4 p.m. at CiCo Park.

Last week the women split a doubleheader with Wichita State and Cloud County Community College, and during the weekend won one game out of five at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

This is the second time the two teams have met, with the first being at the Sooner Invitational in Norman, Okla. UNO came away with a narrow 9-7 victory.

This time, coach Charlotte Michal expects the doubleheader to be just as close.

Ruggers take 1st

K-State's rugby team finished first in the Heart of America Intercollegiate Rugby Tournament last weekend in Lawrence.

In improving their record to 7-1, the ruggers claimed the crown by defeating the Kansas Jayhawks 7-3.

The team made it to the finals by defeating Missouri 14-3 in the first round and by romping past Pittsburg State 18-0 in the semifinals.

To match UNO's power, K-State will counteract with the sticks of Pat Howard, Leslie McGinnis, Pam Rufener and Kris Williams.

Howard, who has six home runs this season, also leads the Wildcats in RBI with nine. McGinnis, Rufener and Williams hold the No. 2 spot with seven each.

Rufener, a freshman catcher, holds the top spot in hits with 16. Howard and McGinnis are tied with 14.

Decision on proposal postponed by council

Collegian Reporter

A decision on a proposal to increase parking fees has been postponed by the Administrative Council because of a lack of time needed to complete the decisionmaking process.

There isn't enough time left in the semester to go through the Student Senate and Faculty Senate hearings necessary to make the proposal take effect next fall, said Dennis Reith, acting head of the Parking and Traffic Council. The fee-hike proposal was developed by the Parking and Traffic Council.

"Any time there's an increase in fees that satisfied with the proposed increases, Reith

"I know there's some faculty people very opposed to the three different scales of

Funding increases are necessary for the capital improvement fund for maintenance of parking lots and the operating costs of Security and Traffic, said Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities

A long-range, 10-year projection of the cash flow need of the traffic and parking operation was presented to the Parking and Traffic Council by University Facilities, Cross said.

The recommendation by University Facilities to meet the expected costs would have increased student fees from the current $10 to $20 in 1982, and to $30 in 1983. Faculty fees would have increased from the

KIDNEY FOUNDATION OF KANSAS & WESTERN MISSOURI

The proposal was to increase the price of parking stickers for students, faculty and staff and change the faculty-staff schedule from two levels to three.

affects the pocketbook you know that it is not going to slide through with a, 'Yes, go ahead and do it' type of a comment," he said. "There's going to be a lot of people concerned with why.'

current $20 to $40 in 1982, and to $60 in 1983, Reith said.

THE PARKING and Traffic Council studied the projection and recommended a modified plan that would have increased fees by 12 percent.

The 12 percent increase was not enough to completely meet the projected needs of the department, but the council believed it would be a fair increase, Reith said.

"We felt like 12 percent was a very fair increase to the expenses that are going to be incurred over the following years as far as maintenance of the parking lots," he said.

Under the council's recommendation, student stickers would have gone to $12 in 1982, Cross said.

Faculty and staff parking sticker prices would have been determined by income split into three levels, instead of the two in use now, he said.

Faculty and staff members who have a yearly income of less than $10,000 currently pay $10 for the first car and $5 for the second. Those making more that $10,000 pay $20 for the first car and $10 for the second.

Under the plan presented by the parking council, those making less than $10,000 would have paid $12 for the first car and $6 for the second. Those earning between $10,000 and $20,000 would have paid $23 for the first car and $12 for the second. Those making more than $20,000 would have paid $34 for the first car and $17 for the second.

Fately, Fiser, Lindamood win city election

City Editor

A better-than-average voter turnout marked the close of the Manhattan election races Tuesday following weeks of heated discussions and last-minute campaign pitches which mainly focused on opinions concerning downtown redevelopment.

In Tuesday's election, two candidates tied for first place in the vie for three available City Commission openings. Incumbent Wanda Fateley and former USD 383 Board of Education member Dave Fiser both tallied 3,242 votes. Their first place tie means both will serve four years on the City Commisson. Suzanne Lindamood placed third in the race with 2,862 votes and will serve two years.

The other three candidates chosen in the primaries, but not in the general were Glenn Busset with 2,390 votes, Larry Morgan FOR LINDAMOOD and Busset

> THE WINNERS for the USD 383 Board of Education were Roger Reitz with 4,412 votes, Don Hill with 3,928 votes, and Martha Miller with 4,157 votes.

According to Riley County Clerk Wanda Coder, voter turnout was a little higher this year than in previous years. Coder said 38.4 percent of eligible Manhattan voters participated at the polls, attributing the improved showing to concern over the downtown redevelopment issues.

In the early hours, voter turnout at the polls was heavy, but after the noon hour it slowed to a steady flow and then picked up again just before the polls closed at 7 p.m., according to an official in the clerk's office.

Fiser said he thought the results were "super terrific."

"I think it's a great day for the city, and I'm just really thrilled with the turnout and the way that the people voted. It was a vote not only for me and Wanda, but a vote for the community."

FISER EXTENDED congratulations to Lindamood and said her representation would make a stronger commission.

Lindamood, who unlike the other two commission winners has campaigned against many of the downtown redevelopment proposals, said she was pleased that she too had won, and that the people voted their choice.

Although disappointed with losses by Morgan and Martin, who also oppossed the downtown mall, Lindamood said she planned to coordinate her positions with what Manhattan residents favor.

Morgan said he was pleased with the high voter turnot. He said the people who voted were more aware of the issues this time, and he felt no regrets at having helped bring the issues to the surface.

"I'm going to run in the next election," Morgan said. "They haven't seen the last of me yet."

Martin said that he would also be a candidate in the next election, and that he intended to attend commission meetings to keep a watchful eye on the issues, not only for the citizens, but for himself.

The apparent victory for supporters of the downtown redevelopment plans through the election of Fateley and Fiser provoked Martin to support the voters' choices. He said he could "become a thorn in their (the commission) side," by keeping abreast of further downtown redevelopment proposals.

Commission authorizes search for new fire station proposals

City Commissioners authorized city manager Don Harmon to seek architectural proposals for a new fire station in north Manhattan at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

Harmon said he has been negotiating with Gene Cross, vice-president for university facilities, for the past several months on an agreement between the city and the university.

The location for the fire station is tentatively set at the corner of Denison and Kimball Avenues, Harmon said.

The use of some university land for the fire station is hoped for at this time, but the costs must be researched, he said.

"We need to know the costs of this and what portion we should give towards the project. Therefore, we recommend that you authorize us to seek proposals from architectural engineers and we will get back to the commission with their proposal," Harmon said.

In other business, the commissioners reviewed a request to establish a recreation and leisure service program for senior citizens in Manhattan.

The proposed budget called for funding for the remainder of the current fiscal year to come from Special Alcohol Funds. The money for this fund comes from the Kansas Liquor by the Drink bill, which places a tax upon all alcoholic drinks sold in private clubs. A percentage of this revenue then goes into the city parks fund.

Initially, the commissioners were skeptical of the proposal for fear that the program wouldn't become a permanent line item in the city's budget and would have to be funded from the Special Alcohol Fund again in the future.

"I'd rather see it as a permanently funded program," Gene Klingler, city commisioner, said. "I think it's an extensive program and maybe we can start the program before the beginning of 1982, but I think it should become a line item in the 1982 budget."

Concerns similar to Klingler's were also expressed by other commissioners, until a presentation by Don Lindley, program coordinator, changed their minds.

"Our proposal for the program is only for half-a-year and it would become part of the Park and Recreation budget next year," Lindley said. "We've done our homework and identified our program more extensively since it was last before this body."

The proposal was considered in December 1979, Lindley said, but additional research on the program was requested, and April 7 was set as a time to return to the commission.

After Lindley's presentation commissioners approved the proposal.

The commission also approved a request from University for Man (UFM) and Green Thumb to build a solar greenhouse on Carlson Plaza.

The city will contribute $1,200 to the project which is slated to begin soon, Bruce Snead, UFM representative, said. "We will lay the foundation next week and build the greenhouse the following week," Snead

In addition to adopting proposals, Mayor Ed Horne made three proclamations. He proclaimed the week of April 4 as "Doolittle Days," the week of April 19 as "Professional Secretaries Week" and the week of April 20 as "Armed Services-YMCA Week" in

The commissioners also approved the licensing of Taco Tico, 220 Tuttle Creek Blvd., for selling cereal malt beverages.

House passes school finance bill

TOPEKA — A school finance bill that would hike local property taxes an estimated $51 million was passed Tuesday by the Kansas House, 71-54, and sent to the Senate.

The proposal is the basic plan offered by Gov. John Carlin minus his additional recommendation that the legislature enact a severance tax to reduce school district property taxes.

The House, however, turned down every attempt to increase the bill's funding in order to lessen reliance on property taxes.

The vote came close to dividing along party lines. Rep. Kent Roth of Great Bend was the only Democrat voting for the bill. The only Republicans finally recorded against the measure were Reps. William Novak of Lost Springs and Lawrence Wilbert of Pittsburg.

Senate President Ross Doyen (R-Concordia), informed of the action, said the upper legislative body would consider the House bill before it takes up one of its own. He was not sure immediately whether the House bill would be sent to the Education Committee or the Ways and Means Committee.

Activist Hoffman gets 3-year sentence

NEW YORK — Abbie Hoffman, the political activist and former Yippie who surrendered last September after nearly seven years underground, was sentenced Tuesday to three years in prison for a 1973 cocaine sale. He must serve at least one year before becoming eligible for parole.

In a hushed Manhattan courtroom packed with Hoffman's supporters, Acting State Supreme Court Justice Brenda Soloff said the graying 43-year-old Hoffman "knowngly, willingly and deliberately" sold the narcotic Aug. 28, 1973, and jumped $10,000 bail a year later. She said the crime, the sale of three pounds of cocaine worth $36,000 to an undercover policeman, "on its face calls for incarceration."

She rejected as inappropriate Hoffman's plea for a sentence of probation and alternative service in a heroin treatment facility.

Stats show more crimes, less victims

WASHINGTON - A Justice Department report said Tuesday that while the number of crimes has increased, the percentage of Americans victimized by crime has actually declined slightly over the past six years.

The report, by the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, showed that 30 percent of the nation's 80.6 million households were victimized by one or more crimes during 1980, down from the 31.3 percent in each of the last three years. In 1975, when the bureau's National Crime Survey began, 32 percent of U.S. households were touched by some crime.

The report said that the six-year pattern shows consistent and pervasive crime. "A large minority of American households experiences crime each year, although most of them experience it in a non-violent form," the report said. "There is great stability in the patterns from year to year, while the trend for the period as a whole seems to be downward."

Chia-Chai barks, Hsing-Hsing departs

WASHINGTON — He was eager. She was nervous. He flirted. She paced.

Amid flowering pear trees, tender cherry blossoms and large shoots of bamboo, Chia-Chia, London's prince of pandas, got his first glimpse Tuesday of his intended; the Americanized Ling-Ling.

He barked. She departed.

Thus, springtime opened yet another chapter in the long-sorrowful saga of the Panda Predicament. It's been eight years now that officials at the National Zoo have hoped that Ling-Ling would become After Hsing-Hsing, Ling-Ling's original mate, failed to prove his virility, and an attempt at artificial insemination last year didn't take, zoo officials imported Chia-Chia from London. The 240-pound panda—not bear, mind you—arrived last month.

Now the question is asked on both sides of the Atlantic:

Will they or won't they?

"Hopefully, they'll show (more) interest in each other when she goes into heat next month," said Sara Iverson, a zoo researcher who was keeping a careful diary of the pandas' movements as they were introduced to each other for the first time through a wire fence. "But it's hard to predict."

Opinions

Policy lacks logic

In one swipe President Reagan is planning to relax or eliminate 34 pollution and safety rules to help the "troubled" auto industry.

Reagan will thus be destroying a decade of lobbying to get someone to listen, and another decade of work to get the regulations on the books.

In his reasoning for the action, Reagan said the government must not necessarily hamper auto industry efforts through excessive regulation and interference.

It took many years of intensive efforts to begin the process of cleaning the air. Reagan's policy will only reverse the progress made to this point.

In addition, Reagan is planning to eliminate fuel efficiency standards after 1985. However, fuel efficiency is one of the main reasons Americans are turning to the foreign auto manufacturers. The auto industry has refused to help itself by meeting the changing needs of consumers. It should not receive government aid, despite the economic impact of its failure.

Soccer important too

Editor,

This letter is not in response to something you have printed, but to something you have failed to print. In a recent letter to the editor it was stated that if an event was newsworthy it would be printed. Well, aren't the K-State Busch and Budweiser soccer teams newsworthy? It's hard enough on the players to finance themselves since K-State doesn't sponsor the club. One would think they would get some recognition for representing K-State. The women's Busch team has had three games already this season and not one of them have appeared in the Collegian, even though the article was submitted. If you can write a half-page feature story on the rugby club, what is wrong with at least printing the score of soccer games?

Column confuses issue

Editor.

The importance and significance of public action taken by women to emphasize our right to live without threat of sexual violence has been thoroughly disregarded in Damien Semanitzky's column of April 6. In a typical response to women organizing, Semanitzky has confused fact with myth.

For example, women working together to free ourselves and man hatred.

Semanitzky also confuses the issue. Rape prevention will not be attained if women are either too afraid or too embarrassed to come out and publicly express our outrage at and concern about violence against women.

Shuttle countdown resumes after 12-hour delay for 'minor' repairs

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Launch crews made back-to-back repairs on the first space shuttle, Columbia, Tuesday and put it back on schedule for a Friday dawn liftoff with two American astronauts aboard.

"Everything here seems to be going smoothly at this time," said space agency spokesman Mark Hess, just before the countdown resumed at 10 p.m. EST. The countdown had stopped for 12 hours repair.

To break out of a logjam caused by one minor problem after another, officials decided to borrow four hours of "hold" time from later in the schedule. When the count resumed, everything was up to speed. "We are basically back on track." Hess said.

During the repair period, four hours were borrowed from a future "hold" in the countdown—a period when no activity is scheduled—and added to the planned eighthour hold on Tuesday.

TO GET ACCUSTOMED to an early wakeup on launch day, astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen have been gradually adjusting their sleep cycles—going to be earlier and getting up earlier each day. Last Saturday, wakeup was 4:45 a.m. On Sunday it was 4:15. On Monday 3:45. On Thursday and launch day the call will come at 2:05 a.m.

The Columbia is the first spaceship designed to make repeated trips into space, using replenishable booster rockets and an expendable external fuel tank. The boosters drop away after 2 minutes of flight and are recovered; the external tank breaks up in the atmosphere when it is released after 8½

Elevator explosion leaves 2 men hurt, one believed buried

BELLWOOD, Neb. (AP) — Two men were injured seriously and another was believed buried beneath mounds of grain and chunks of concrete when an explosion rocked the Farmers Co-Op grain elevator in Bellwood Tuesday afternoon, officials said.

Elevator office manager Maxine McDonald said rescue workers were sifting through grain and rubble in search of an Co-Op employee reported missing after the blast, which one eyewithess said "demolished the elevator."

"It is completely destroyed as far as the structure is concerned," said Joe Wilson, who owns a barbershop near the elevator.

Mrs. McDonald said the grain dust explosion occurred about 4:15 p.m. while a farmer was unloading grain.

"We had a farmer in the elevator in a truck unloading grain," Mrs. McDonald said. "We had three employees there too. The farmer was covered with grain and they had to dig him out. Right now they're digging the grain out trying to find our other minutes flight.

As launch day moved closer, space agency officials worried about the weather. Mission rules require that the launch be scrubbed if head winds and cross winds are stronger than 10 knots at Cape Canaveral's 15,000-foot shuttle landing strip—in the case the Columbia runs into trouble achieving orbit and has to return.

IF WEATHER OR other problems delay the launch more than six hours beyond schedule Friday, the liftoff is likely to be delayed until Sunday because a 48-hour turnaround period is required once fuel has been pumped into the tanks.

Air Force weathermen predicted generally fair skies Friday, the temperature about 70, and surface winds of 10 to 12 mph—11½ to 14 knots.

All day Tuesday, starting at 10 a.m., countdown clocks on the launch pad and in the control room 3½ miles away, stood still at 1 day, 14 hours and 30 minutes as the catchup work proceeded.

From the beginning, the countdown work lagged.

FIRST, AN ENGINE valve popped open without command. This was fixed when technicians found and bypassed a short circuit in the electrical system.

Then, a valve in the ground support equipment leaked and the three hours it took to replace idled most launch workers.

Then, early Tuesday, overnight crews found contaminants in the gas lines to Columbia's fuel cells. Workmen had to repeat a seven-hour effort to purify the lines, and by noon the hoses—which carry gaseous oxygen and nitrogen—were declared clean.

Men slay 23 in San Salvador; city streets strewn with bodies

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) -Men in uniform and civilian clothes drove into a poor suburb of San Salvador before dawn Tuesday, pulled 23 people from their homes and shot them dead in the street, witnesses said. Seven more people were slain in their homes in front of their families, they said.

A Defense Ministry spokesman, who declined to be identified, denied there had been a premeditated massacre, and the shooting started when an army patrol was fired upon. He said four government soldiers were killed in the exchange of fire.

When reporters arrived in the suburb of Monte Carmelos, 23 bodies ripped by automatic weapons fire were strewn for 100 yards. Two homes were burned, apparently by fires started by bazooka rounds.

"It was horrible ... indescribable," said a woman who lives in the area.

"It was the National Guard, and police," shouted several residents.

The street where the victims were slain ran with blood and the victims, presumed to be leftists, were disfigured by large-caliber slugs pumped into their heads and chests. One young boy said he saw a masked man in civilian clothes pointing out homes from which victims were dragged.

He said that after the masked man pointed out a house, uniformed men went to its door, knocked, and after a few seconds one or two people were dragged out.

"I could hear the screams of someone asking a neighbor to turn on the outside lights, but no one did, and the shooting began," he said.

Area residents said the seven victims shot in their homes refused to come out, so they were slain on the spot, in front of their families.

"We were very afraid," said one pregnant woman. Another resident said they watched from windows, but were afraid to go outside.

"We could not leave the house until dawn, and when there was sufficient light, the picture we saw was horrible," the resident said. "The whole street was covered with bodies."

The killings were the latest in the leftright political struggle that has claimed an estimated 18,000 lives since President Carlos Humberto Romero was ousted by a junta in October 1979. Leftist guerrillas have been trying to replace the junta with a Marxist regime.

Late book requests increase costs

The high price students pay for textbooks can indirectly be attributed to the K-State instructors who miss their deadline for turning in book requests.

The increased prices come from the bookstores having to buy new books, instead of used books, according to Jerry Fields, book department manager at the Union

Although 75 percent of the faculty get their requests in on time, the remaining 25 percent are still a concern, Fields said.

"I think it's a significant problem," Fields said.

The bookstore supplies the departments of each college with textbook request forms and sends each faculty member a letter stressing the need for the faculty members to get their requests in by the deadline.

In the letter sent to faculty members this semester, Fields said approximately 150,000 textbooks would be needed for students next semester. The memo asked instructors to have their forms returned to the Union Bookstore by March 9. The Union Bookstore sends copies of the request forms to Varney's Bookstore.

Although the ordering deadline was nearly a month ago, all of the request forms have not been returned, Fields said.

There are several reasons why the request forms should be returned by March in the spring semester, and in early October in the fall semester, Fields said.

Once the forms are returned by the instructor, each book title must be looked up to see if used books are available to "buy from the jobbers," or used book salesmen, Fields said.

The used-book market is more profitable in the long run to both the bookstores and the students, Fields said. The Manhattan bookstores are in competition with other schools to buy used books from companies, especially in the fall, he said.

"The used-book program reduces the total book cost by an excess of 20 percent," Fields

At the same time the bookstores are canvassing for used books, they are preparing the book buy-back list, he said. It is important for the textbook request forms to be in at this time because if the bookstore doesn't have a report that a book is going to be used the next semester, then students will only get the wholesale price of the book when they sell them back.

'Young Engineer of the Year' chosen

The Mid-Central Region of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE) has named Mark Schrock, assistant professor of agricultural engineering, as "Young Engineer of the Year."

Schrock was selected because of his activites in and out of ASAE. He is former chairman of the Mid-Central Region and currently serves as vice chairman of the grain harvesting committee. He also belongs to the Society of Automotive Engineers, Inc.; the Council of Agricultural Science and Technology; Wheat Industry Resource Committee of the National Association of Wheat Growers and the Energy Committee of the Great Plains Agricultural Council.

Schrock earned a degree in agricultural engineering from K-State in 1969 and a doctorate in mechanical engineering in 1978.

Foundation announces research grants

The Kansas State Research Foundation has announced the granting of five grants, totaling $20,500.

The grants are designed to promote research at the University and are funded with income from licensed patent rights. Thirteen grants were considered for selection.

The grants approved were:

—$3,000 to Leniel Harbers, professor of animal sciences and industry, and Keith Behnke, assistant professor of grain science and industry for a study on "Soluble Carbohydrate Rumen-Bypass."

—$3,000 to Ike Jeon, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, and Richard Bassette, professor of animal sciences and industry for "Development of Process Technology for Using Whey as a Soft Drink Base."

—$4,500 to Frederick Oehme and Fumiake Akahori, professors of surgery and medicine for "Inhibition of Callagen Synthesis as a Treatment for Paraquat Poisoning."

-$6,000 to Cecil Best, professor of civil engineering, for "A Process to Convert High-Lime Slags Directly into Portland Cement."

-$4,000 to R.C. Hoseney, professor of grain science and industry for "Production of Superior Whole Wheat Bread."

In addition, an earlier grant of $2,800 went to Liang Fan, head of the Department of Chemical Engineering, and Alexander Matthews, assistant professor of civil engineering, for research on "Thermal Conditioning of Biological Sludges Using Microwave Energy."

'Outstanding faculty' members chosen

Both professors selected as outstanding faculty members of the spring semester are professors in agriculture. James Morrill, professor of animal sciences and industry, has been named the lower level outstanding faculty member and Earl Baugher, assistant professor of agricultural engineering, was selected as upper level outstanding faculty member.

Morrill advises 30 undergraduate students and three graduate students in animal sciences and pre-veterinary medicine. He does research on dairy cattle nutrition and health and has served as the adviser for the Dairy Science Club. He currently advises the Pre-Vet Club. He teaches Dairy Science, Fundamentals of Nutrition and Dairy Cattle Nutrition.

Baugher teaches Farm Power, Advanced Farm Power and Agricultural Mechanics Methods. He advises 20 students and has served as faculty adviser for the agricultural mechanization club and K-Laires Square Dance Club.

He is also active with Kansas Future Farmers of America and in 1970 received the Honorary State Farmer Degree from the Kansas Association of Future Farmers of America.

Students form NSPE chapter

The Kansas Engineering Society recently approved a K-State chapter of the Natonal Society of Professional Engineers.

About 70 students formed the chapter and will accept the charter, presented by the state society, at an annual meeting in May.

The society encourages professionalism and cooperation among engineers. Endorsement from the state society, formation of a board of faculty advisers and appointment of students who agree to serve as chapter officers, are necessary before a charter is granted.

'Student of the Semester' chosen

The College of Arts and Sciences first "Student of the Semester" award has been given to Michael Hegarty, junior in economics and political science.

Hegarty has been involved in many organizations including Chimes, Spring Fling, the Bloodmobile, Parents' Day, the Bump-a-Thon for Muscular Dystrophy, College Republicans, German Club, Pre-law Club, and intramural sports.

The recipient of this award is determined by Mortar Board, senior honor society. The award is sponsored by the student Arts and Sciences Council. A plaque will be placed in Eisenhower Hall to commemorate Hegarty's achievements.

U.S. officials positive toward Soviet speech warning that a Soviet invasion of Poland might be imminent, Reagan administration officials breathed easier Tuesday following signs that the Kremlin was prepared to let Poland work out its problems on its own.

Responding to a speech in Czecholslovakia by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, undersecretary of state for political affairs Walter Stoessel said the Poles now "have some more time to put their house in order, according to Soviet Stoessel, appearing on NBC-TV's "Today" show, was responding to a speech by Brezhnev in Prague in which he said the Polish Communist Party and other "true Polish patriots" would be able to manage the country's problems by themselves.

AT THE State Department, spokesman William Dyess responded more cautiously to Brezhnev's speech, delivered at a Czechoslovak Communist Party Congress.

"If he meant to say that the Poles should be allowed to solve their own problems without outside interference, we would welcome this," Dyess said. "That's been our consistent position."

Other officials, speaking privately, said they were encouraged by other developments. They noted that hours after Brezhnev's speech, East European news agencies announced that Warsaw Pact military maneuvers were completed

Spring weather puts winter wheat crop ahead of schedule

TOPEKA (AP) - Kansas' 1981 wheat crop is making good growth and is 10 days to two weeks ahead of normal development in some sections of the state, the Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said.

Warm spring weather and recent rains speeded growth of the crop, but additional moisture is needed, the weekly summary of condition of the crop said.

Condition of the 1981 crop continues to be rated good in most areas of the state, but only fair to poor in the southwest, southcentral and northcentral sections.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Four days after Tuesday and that "participating forces were returning to the places of their permanent stationing."

> That announcement, combined with Brezhnev's speech, apparently eliminated, for the time being, the prospect of a fullblown crisis in East-West relations.

> IT WAS JUST last Friday that the Reagan administration seemed to have resigned itself to an imminent Soviet intervention. Despite an easing of tensions inside Poland, the Warsaw Pact troop maneuvers had gone well beyond what U.S. officials said was required for the annual spring exercises.

> The Soviets flew a number of military transport planes into Poland. Dyess, the State Department spokesman, said the Soviets were "capable of moving at any time."

From his hospital bed, President Reagan authorized the sending of a message to Brezhnev reportedly warning of grave consequences to East-West relations if Moscow interfered. And in Bonn, West Germany, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger declared anew, this time to NATO defense ministers, that the United States would entertain no renewal of arms talks if the Soviets intervened in Poland.

Some officials who had been optimistic all along about the prospect for Soviet restraint had changed their mind as of late last week.

Still, some analysts felt the administration had exaggerated the danger of Soviet intervention. "My problem is that I don't see the troops," one official said over the weekend.

He said the Soviets would need 600,000 troops to ensure a successful intervention but had only 200,000 available for immediate deployment.

Geographer points new ways for collegiate sports recruiting

Collegian Reporter

A restructuring of the American college sports system needs to be brought about through an emphasis on geographical areas, according to a geographer visiting campus

John Rooney Jr., professor of geography at Oklahoma State University, delivered an address in Thompson Hall titled, "America Needs A New Intercollegiate Sports System." Geographical recruiting, restructuring the conference system to minimize travel and the formation of recruiting districts to provide equal access to talent were all plans discussed by Rooney to form better recruiting methods.

Rooney became interested in the geographic considerations of intercollegiate athletics early in his teaching career.

"I really got drawn in at my first teaching job at the University of Wyoming," he said.

AN AVOWED sports fan, Rooney was attending a Wyoming football game and said he was amazed that of the 78 players on the Wyoming roster, only two were from Wyoming.

Rooney said he became more interested in intercollegiate sports when he taught at the University of Exeter, England.

"The English cannot fathom colleges and universities in the sports entertainment business," he said.

This is because there are only one-tenth the professional sports teams per capita in the United States as compared to the rest of the developed countries in the world, he said.

"Because of this, colleges have had to come in and deliver sports services," he said. Big-time college sports developed to fill the void in areas of the United States not served by professional sports, he said.

A TOTAL reorganization of intercollegiate sports is needed in order to relieve some of the inequalities that now exist in major college sports, he said. Because women's sports programs are becoming more developed, they have the same problems.

"I see two ways to go," Rooney said. "One way is to go back to the past-return to a Utopian ideal of intercollegiate sports."

This system would return college athletes to being sports participants in a strictly extracurricular activity, he said.

"The other alternative is to create an

By JIM LAURENCIG honest system within the framework of bigtime sports entertainment," Rooney said.

In its present form, the collegiate sports system is dishonest and inadequate, Rooney said. He said the present system serves neither the athletic nor the academic mission that it tries to.

ATHLETES DON'T automatically become students, he said.

"We assume that any young person with basketball or football talent also has an academic motivation," he said.

This assumption can have an adverse effect on the academic system, he said.

"Transcript meddling and phony courses put all students' transcripts in jeopardy," he

About 30 to 40 percent of college athletes today attend college merely to engage in sports, he said. These figures are reflected in the number who receive a college degree.

Only 50 percent of college athletes receive a degree within five years, and the percentage is even less for those who go on to professional sports, he said. Rooney said only 28 percent of professional football players have degrees, and only 18 percent of pro basketball players have college degrees.

This compares unfavorably to the 1940 University of Michigan national championship football team, where no scholarships were awarded, yet 39 of 40 team members graduated, Rooney said.

UNDER ROONEY'S plan the number of schools playing Division I football would be reduced to about 60, and the number playing basketball to about twice that number.

The plan would allow those attending college merely for athletics to spend a minimal amount of time-maybe three to six hours-in the classroom when their sport is in season and they would be paid for their athletic services, Rooney said.

Rooney emphasized the change is necessary.

"What exists right now is bound to selfdestruct," he said.

Nation's top prospect, Ewing, to sign with Georgetown today

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Pat Ewing, a gigantically talented teen-ager, says he'll sign his name Wednesday to a letter of intent with Georgetown. If he does, the Hoyas will leap to the threshold of national basketball prominence.

Whether they cross over to join Virginia, North Carolina and others who landed Ewing-like prospects and zoomed straight to the top remains to be seen.

But all day Wednesday, the date high school basketball players can first sign will be swinging delicately in the breeze.

percent of his team. Also unlike football, basketball's recruiting wars seldom come to a climax within a day or two of the national signing team. But one basketball player is twenty

"For some reason, many of the big names in basketball seem to take their time more than in football," said David Berst, head of the NCAA's enforcement department.

MUCH OF THE attention is focused this year on an unlikely basketball hotbed-Wichita, home of Dreiling and Aubrey Sherrod, a 6-4 guard who's also on everybody's "most wanted" list. Both youngsters have said they would like to stay home and play for Wichita State. But recent reports in The Kansas City Times and other newspapers have indicated the school may be guilty of numerous NCAA violations. And the Shockers have admitted they are under investigation.

But Wichita State is assuring Sherrod and Dreiling it is not about to go on probation. And since the NCAA has an unbendable policy of not discussing pending investigations, the teen-agers are left with only wild rumors and promises from people with a vested interest.

Who will they believe? Their friends at Wichita State who insist that all is well? Or the army of rival recruiters urging them not to waste their careers on an outlaw program that's about to go to jail?

On Wednesday, they may make their final

Heights' Sherrod won't sign today

K-State remains one of two schools in the race to get Aubrey Sherrod's signature, but it doesn't look like the Wichita prepster will make up his mind until sometime next week.

Wednesday is the first day college basketball coaches can sign high school players to NCAA national letters of intent.

It's unlikely, though, that Sherrod, the 6-4 All-America guard from Wichita Heights who was named the most valuable player of the prestigious Capital Classic all-star game, will remove the suspense as to where he is headed.

Sherrod, who has narrowed his choices to K-State and Wichita State, has said he will wait until after Saturday's McDonald's All-America game in Wichita to make his decision, which will likely be announced early next week in a news conference.

Right now Sherrod apparently is leaning toward Wichita State, but he is worried about a possible probation against the Shockers, who are under investigation by the NCAA for alleged rule violations. An NCAA decision doesn't appear to be for-

Wichita's other blue-chip prospect, 6-11 center Greg Dreiling, says he will sign with Wichita State despite the possibility of probation for the Shockers.

While K-State will have to wait for Sherrod to decide, coach Jack Hartman will still be busy Wednesday. K-State has received an oral committment from Kenny Williams, a 6-4 guard from Chicago-St. Joseph, and is also courting Ernest Harris, a 6-8, 220-pounder from Memphis, Tenn., Greg Livingston, a 6-4 guard from Coffeyville, and Paul Kuiper, a 6-10 center from Colorado Springs.

The Wildcats will probably sign Eddie Elder, a 6-8 forward from Cascia Hall in Tulsa, Okla., Wednesday. Elder announced last week he will be attending K-State next year.

Athletics not all bad or good

After listening to John Rooney's speech "A New Intercollegiate Sports System," I left Thompson 213 a bit baffled.

As an avid sports buff, I was interested to hear what a geographer had to say about sports. I mean, those guys are supposed to deal with state capitals and Rand McNally Road Atlases, aren't they?

But Rooney proved my sterotyping to be false by introducing a new system on intercollegiate athletics.

Outside the locker room

At first Rooney spoke of the problems with the present system-like all the dirty dealings and how football (and other sports) was a game of money.

I was familiar with the "politicing" involved in sports and I knew that sometimes things weren't done on the up and up. So what? Society has begun to accept these illegalities and has only become concerned when someone gets caught.

BUT ROONEY'S issues were well taken. I mean, I don't like to think that Nebraska can beat Colorado because they can "slide more dollars" to get the better athletes. Cheating is bothersome, but as Rooney said, "if the NCAA enforced the exisiting rules, they'd paralyze the system.'

Rooney made another point I hadn't even considered—the athlete.

The problem he pointed out was sports was no longer the "Utopian ideal" of students playing a recreational game for their university. Instead sports has become a complicated tangle of recruiting, scholarships and hypocracies.

'Cats get revenge by defeating UNO

By LINDA LUGINBILL Collegian Reporter

After losing to the University of Nebraska-Omaha earlier this year, K-State's softball team got revenge on the diamond Tuesday afternoon.

The women swept a doubleheader, 8-1 in the first game and 3-2 in the second game, to improve their record to 9-12.

The Lady Mavericks took an early lead in the opening game, 1-0, and held that margin until the third inning.

During K-State's at bat, UNO pulled off a double play on a bunt by Melanie Lees with a runner on first.

The Wildcats, though, came back and scored five runs, three of them driven in on a double to center field by Brenda Holaday, to take a 5-1 lead.

In the fourth, Cindy Farris replaced Sherrie Johnston, who was sick over the weekend, at pitcher and retired the Lady Mavericks in order.

BY THE END OF the sixth inning, K-State had scored three more runs, two of which Rooney said one hypocracy of the present system was the idea that young men and women with athletic talent were assumed to have academic talent and motivation.

It's not necessarily true that all athletes want to be Rhodes Scholars, but it's not necessarily true all athletes want to be thought of as "dumb jocks." Rooney's system would relieve the pressure put on athletes to do well in sports as well as in

HE PROPOSES A split year for athletes-six months of training and playing and six months of straight school work. For those athletes who Rooney labeled as "masquerading as students," they could attend vocational technical school. In other words, if they wanted to make sports their entire life, they could.

The idea sounded great. The athlete who is concerned with an education can get one while the guy who is only concerned with football can devote his full attention to it.

But then Rooney hit the group with an astonishing figure—only 28 percent of all pro football players have college degrees. It bothered me because I thought "what are these guys going to do when they get to old to play or get injured at age 25?"

I guess this didn't bother me too much because I thought they could sell insurance promote sports equipment or something.

But what inspiration does Rooney's system give today's youth? Why would a kid who wanted to make a living by playing pro sports go to school? There's no incentive at all. Another problem is, if a kid squeaks by in school thinking that athletics will be his life and finds out at age 21 that he isn't good enough, where does that leave him?

Rooney had some good points, but again his ideas have their faults.

Birdsong injured in Kings' loss

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Guards Walter Davis and Dennis Johnson scored 16 points each to lead five players in double figures and help the Phoenix Suns to a 102-80 win over the Kansas City Kings Tuesday night in the first game of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association Western Conference semifinals series.

The Kings, who upset Portland to advance against the Suns, lost leading scorer Otis Birdsong in the third quarter-the same time the Suns took control of the game. Birdsong, who missed games this season with a knee injury, suffered a sprained ankle and missed the rest of the game. The Kings lost guard Phil Ford to an eye injury late in the year and he has not played in the last 18 games.

In other playoff action Tuesday night, the Houston Rockets beat the San Antonio Spurs 107-98 in their first game in the Western Conference semifinals. Moses Malone led the Rockets with 27 points.

In the Eastern Conference semifinals, the Boston Celtics defeated the Chicago Bulls 106-97 to take a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven series, and Marques Johnson scored 22 points as the Milwaukee Bucks evened their best-of-seven series Philadelphia76ers at one game apiece with a 109-99 win.

World Series' champs confident for opener

CINCINNATI (AP) — Philadelphia manager Dallas Green says his 1981 Phillies are a better team than they were a year ago when they won division, league and World Series championships.

Starting Wednesday, they'll have to prove it.

The Phillies open the 1981 major league baseball season in a 1 p.m., CST, game against the Cincinnati Reds.

The two starting pitchers will be Cy Young Award winners Steve Carlton for the Phillies and Tom Seaver for the Reds.

"We're the team to beat," Green said as the Phillies held their final workout Tuesday in Riverfront Stadium. "I don't think we're going to be complacent. We're a much better team than we were in 1980, but, of course, we've got to stay sound with our key people."

Green said the addition of former Atlanta Braves Gary Matthews in left field gave the Phils added power plus speed in their lineup.

"I used to have to make a choice between power or speed, and I don't have that problem now," Green said. "Matthews has settled us considerably. He's given us a consistency we didn't have last year. I think came on a triple from Holaday.

Going into the seventh, the 'Cats led 8-1, and they won the game by putting the Mavericks down in order.

Farris, who picked up the win, retired all 12 batters she faced and struck out four. UNO's Kim Juhl took the loss, yielding eight hits while striking out five.

The second game was much closer, with each team scoring one run in the first inning. The score stayed tied until the fourth when K-State capitalized on three UNO errors and scored two runs to take a 3-1 lead.

In the sixth, the Mavericks started a comeback when Karol Ulmer hit a single to left field to score Caroline Reither, who had reached base on a hit. UNO, though, couldn't get any more runs in the inning.

JANEL ANDERSON CAME out the winning pitcher as she put the Mavericks down in order in the seventh. Anderson gave up five hits while UNO pitcher Jody Sanders allowed only four.

K-State coach Charlotte Michal said the second game was closer to how she expected the doubleheader to be.

"I thought we did well in both games, but the second one was how I thought they both would be," she said.

A reason for K-State's fine performance, according to Michal, was due to how hard it has been working on its batting.

"We've been working hard in practice on batting and I think it helped us today," Michal said. "Our offense was better in the first game because we got more hits, but our defense played good in both games."

Six of K-State's eight hits came from Pat Howard, Taryn Bachis and Holaday, with two each. Holaday also drove in five runs.

The Wildcats now face Missouri Western State today at 4 p.m. at CiCo Park. The doubleheader will be the first time the teams have met.

This is where it all started for you on a cool October night, but who knows where it'll end. Looking Good, Kris, HBD Love, G-C Goodnow he is one of the best all-around players in the National League."

Green said the Phillies learned late last season that they can be world champions only if they play as a team, holding their many divergent personalities in check.

"I think they finally learned that I am not the ogre that I'm made out to be," Green said. "They learned to have fun. For that, and for several reasons, 1981 can't be nearly as difficult as 1980."

Reds Manager John McNamara thinks he has an improved team, too, although the only additions have been former Chicago Cubs pinch-hitters Larry Bittner and Mike Vail and a backup catcher Mike O'Berry Vail, and a backup catcher, Mike O'Berry.

"We're better than we were last year," said McNamara. "Our young pitchers got a lot of experience during the stretch drive last year, and we've improved our bench. We got everything accomplished in spring training that we wanted. We're ready."

The traditional season opener, played in Cincinnati every year but one this century, is a sellout. The Reds expect two former American hostages to attend the game, but President Reagan, who was wounded in an assassination attempt last week, will not.

In the rugged mountains of Wyoming and Washington, NOLS is teaching the essential skills of backcountry living.

On the Alaskan artic tundra and the grasslands of Kenya, East Africa, NOLS students are learning the challenges of enjoying and preserving the wild lands of the earth.

For fifteen years THE NATIONAL OUTDOOR LEADERSHIP SCHOOL has trained wilderness leaders for most of the major outdoor programs in this country. Today, the unique non-profit educational center offers over 30 different backcountry courses which range in length from 2 weeks to 3½ months.

Man charged with threatening president's life

NEW YORK (AP) - Secret Service agents pulled a 22-year-old man armed with a 32-caliber revolver off a bus in the Port Authority bus terminal on Tuesday and charged him with threatening the life of President Reagan.

Agents said Edward Michael Richardson had left a letter in a New Haven, Conn., hotel in which he said Reagan was "targeted for death."

A second letter found Tuesday in the hotel room indicated that Richardson, of Drexel Hill, Pa., shared John Hinckley Jr.'s affection for actress Jodie Foster, a freshman at Yale University.

Hinckley was arrested last week ago and charged with attempted assassination of the president after Reagan and three other men were shot in Washington, D.C.

The letters were found by a cleaning woman at the hotel.

Asked whether there was any connection between Hinckley and Richardson, Special Agent James D'Amelio said "the investigation is continuing. We can't comment on that."

WHAT'S GOING ON IN KANSAS NURSING HOMES?

"I took nine students in there and we had nine different patients. The patients were lying in urine or in feces; and there is no mattress pads on there, so it just run all up on these people, and it's in their hair and under their toenalls and dried between their toes." (Official Transcript of the Hillhaven-Topeka Administrative Hearing, January, 1980)

"Collectively, as well as individually, these problems were not outside the range of reasonable normalcy for a skilled nursing care operation . . . The 1980 certification which is currently under consideration should be issued without delay or prejudice." (Hearing Officer's Report of the hearing, to Joseph F. Harkins, Secretary, Kansas Department of Health and Environment, January, 1980)

Trio finds solution to Littlewood conjecture

By DEBI DUNCAN
Collegian Reporter
For 33 years, no one knew the answer to the "Littlewood Conjecture." Mathematicians have worked since 1948 to solve the Littlewood inequality. Finally in late January, Louis Pigno, K-State professor of mathematics, in collaboration with two other mathematicians, solved the conjecture they began working on last fall.

The Littlewood Conjecture is a mathematical problem within a type of mathematics known as Fourier, or harmonic analysis. Harmonic analysis can be applied to subjects such as heat flow, wave motion and electrical circuitry.

Pigno, along with professors O.C. McGehee of Louisiana State University and Brent Smith of Illinois State University, have now been credited by other mathematicians as proving Littlewood's conjecture.

Previous attempts at solving the conjecture had involved counting problems, Pigno said. However Pigno, Smith and McGehee abandoned this conventional approach.

"The main novelty of our method consists in the replacement of very hard counting arguments that appeared in virtually all previous attacks on the problem by a very simple analytical argument," Pigno said.

BY LATE JANUARY the trio had solved the problem. They sent the solution to other mathematicians who agreed with them and gave the trio credit for the answer.

It is "impossible" to predict what applications will develop from the solution to Littlewood's conjecture, Pigno said.

"Mathematical experience shows that often it is the new method, which led to the solution of a problem, that becomes important rather than the result itself."

However solving Littlewood's conjecture

Bill attempts to limit KUMC scholarships

TOPEKA (AP) — A bill limiting a broad scholarship program offered to medical students at the University of Kansas Medical Center won endorsement by a Senate panel Tuesday.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee agreed to introduce the proposal into the upper chamber with a recommendation that it be passed.

The bill would limit the number of medical scholarships to 100 for each class beginning in the fiscal year starting July 1.

Currently, there are no limits on the program, which offers scholarships covering tuition and some living expenses in exchange for agreeing to practice in areas of the state which are medically underserved.

Once in the program, students can avoid the service by paying back the amount of the scholarship, with 10 percent interest. The bill would increase the interest rate to 12 percent on any scholarship agreements made beginning next fall.

> No, they won't draft you while you're in college!

Happy birthday, Bobby Love, Deb will strengthen K-State's reputation as a university where research is conducted and valued, Pigno said.

MANY NOTED mathematicians have puzzled over the Littlewood Conjecture, which was originally presented in a 1948 paper by J. Littlewood and G.H. Hardy.

"The problem was apparently well-known in British analysis circles for at least 10 years prior to its formal statement in 1948," Pigno said.

After the conjecture was proposed, progress on the problem wasn't made until 1959 when P.J. Cohen, professor of mathematics at Stanford University, obtained a partial solution to the problem.

In 1960, British analyst H. Davenport, modified Cohen's technique to obtain a more complete solution, Pigno said.

In 1978, Canadian mathematician John Fournier extended the Cohen-Davenport result to obtain an estimate, but the problem wasn't solved.

BEGINNING IN 1978, S.K. Pichorides, a Greek mathematician, developed a new line of attack on the conjecture. He was awarded the Salem prize, a prestigious award given to mathematicians in harmonic analysis, for his contribution.

More than two years later, the conjecture was proven by Pigno, Smith and McGehee.

Two of the trio met in 1976. Pigno and Smith were brought together when McGehee spoke on harmonic analysis at K-State. Smith was then a student of McGehee. Their collaboration continued after Smith went to the University of Kentucky in 1979.

In October 1980, McGehee joined Pigno and Smith in working to prove the conjecture, collaborating through letters and telephone calls. Their proof will appear in an article in the May issue of the Annals of Mathematics, Pigno said.

Campus, city officials discuss new fire station

Collegian Reporter

While there seems to be some confusion over the city's role in providing fire protection to the campus, the issue could be settled soon if negotiators come to an agreement about construction of new fire station on University property.

Talks are underway between the University and the city for a new fire station. Planners have tentatively set the location of the station on University-owned land at the corner of Denison and Kimball Avenues.

Plans are being coordinated between Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, and city manager Don Harmon.

PLANS ARE still being studied by the negotiators and no official agreements have been made. The city commissioners in a meeting Tuesday, however, authorized Harmon to seek architectural proposals for the fire station.

The new fire station would be a joint venture and would be the first combined effort by K-State and the city to provide improved fire protection, Cross said.

Cross would not reveal any possible specifics of the agreement including whether the University would request guaranteed campus fire protection from the city in exchange for land provided by K-

"We are just working on it and we'll have to see how it proceeds,"

Cross said. "If it proceeds smoothly and an agreement is reached, it would then have to go to the City Commission as well as the Board of Regents and the Legislature before it is approved."

FRANK DUNCAN, University fire chief, said the K-State fire department has responsibility for all campus fires with the Manhattan fire department acting as a back-up.

The campus department usually responds alone to any fires other than structural fires, Duncan said. An oral agreement between the two departments allows the city fire unit to respond to notices centrally dispatched by Security and Traffic in the event of a structural fire, he said.

The University maintains a 1948 Ford fire truck for its fire protection.

"There is no agreement with the city currently, they just cover our fires as a community service,"

If negotiations go well, approval by the city, the regents and the Legislature could be complete in spring 1982, Cross said. Because negotiations are still underway, Cross wouldn't confirm how the station would be funded if University-owned land is used.

"We are working on an agreement with the University now, but we've got to get cost estimates (for the fire station) before any agreement is reached," Harmon said.

PRELIMINARY WORK and research into the cost of the new fire station should be done within six months and must be complete before negotiations are finalized.

Although negotiations have been going on periodically for a year, they have escalated in the last few months, Harmon said.

involved in the preliminary planning, but is concerned about the design of fire station entrances in relation to campus, Vince Cool, assistant vice president for University Planning, said.

"We would be concerned with the design of the fire station because if it is located on the corner of Denison and Kimball Avenue, it would be located close to campus and close to campus entrances," Cool said. "We are mostly concerned with the station's entrance way on to the campus."

Although there may be questions about the station's design, the proposed location is supported by University planners.

"The said location (at Denison and Kimball) is one of the most desirable spots and the most logical spot for Manhattan's next fire station," Cool said. "This location would provide rapid service to the campus and allow University Planning and the city easy access to west and Architectural Services will not be north Manhattan."

New soldiers add to housing bind

Staff Writer

A strained housing situation for K-State students looking for an offcampus residence in the fall could be made worse by an influx of about 2,000 Fort Riley personnel.

The additional personnel at Fort Riley will cause a housing shortage for students this fall, Rick Leiker, off-campus housing officer for the University. He stressed that students should arrangements for the fall before school is out.

Many students began looking for housing earlier this year than in past years, Leiker said. Students began searching earlier partially because of the poor national economy and limited personal finances of students, he said.

"A lot more people are looking earlier than in the past," Leiker

THE ADDITIONAL personnel will be used to form new units and add to established units, according to Maj. Jack Horn, public affairs officer at Fort Riley. The increase from 19,000 to 21,000 personnel will occur during the next year or so, Horn said.

The primary reason for the increase at Fort Riley, Horn said, is beefing the division up to previous strength levels."

K-State Department of Housing, "finding suitable housing for our customers," Judy Grossnickle, Fort Riley housing referral officer,

"Our goals are basically the same—to house people," she said.

In the fall of 1980, 8,029 students lived off campus in Manhattan. This figure does not include those who lived in cooperative houses, fraternities, sororities, or commuted from out of town. Last summer, approximately 3,000 housing, Leiker said. He expects this number to be greater this year because of greater awareness of the office's existence.

THIS YEAR, some area apartment complexes are already full, Leiker said. The housing office provides a free list to students including approximately 99 of the 105 to 110 apartment complexes in

The University has a specified amount of on-campus housing that is usually full during regular school sessions, he said. In addition to this limited amount of housing, there has been an increase in enrollment and there will be an increase in the need for off-campus housing, Leiker said.

they look to other areas, my military," she said.

Grossnickle said. The off-post housing office at Fort Riley is "actively recruiting" landlords from Clay Center, Council Grove and Abilene.

"Junction City and Manhattan have pretty well hit their saturation point," she said.

"It's (housing shortage) going from bad to worse," Grossnickle said.

SOME OF THE NEW personnel will be those returning from overseas and some will be basic students went through the housing trainees assigned to the fort, office in search of available Donna Beach, public information officer, said.

The influx began to be noticeable in December, "in my office," Grossnickle said.

In the past, the housing referral office at Fort Riley received approximately 15 inquiries about offpost housing each day. Since January, the inquiries have nearly doubled to between 30 and 40. In the last six months, 2,189 personnel have sought off-post housing. Grossnickle said.

"There is definitely a housing (shortage) situation now," she said, "and it's going to get worse in September."

Many students wait until the beginning of the school year to seek housing, she said, and if a landlord When Fort Riley personnel can't has not committed his property to find housing near Junction City, a student, "he's going to rent it to

Carlin to consider university funding bill

TOPEKA - The Kansas Senate agreed Wednesday to accept a compromise bill funding the state university system, and sent it to the governor for his consideration.

On a 30-10 vote, the upper chamber adopted a conference committee report worked out between members of the House and the Senate which provides more than $250 million in state tax money to fund the eight institutions under the Kansas Board of Regents.

The bill gives faculty members a including a 1 percent reduction in 7 percent salary increase, and a 5.5 percent boost in each school's general operating expenses. It also mandates a 15 percent tuition increase for all six universities, the Kansas Technical Institute, the University of Kansas Medical Center and the Kansas State University Veterinary Medicine

The bill reflects about $10 million in cuts from budget recom-universities, and would only mendations made by Gov. John "hamstring" them in their efforts proposed faculty salary increases.

The measure drew criticism from Republican Sen. Jane Eldredge of Lawrence because of a House-added provision which limited the total number of unclassified employees, generally professors and other faculty, at each institution.

She said it unfairly restricted Carlin for the university system, to cope with changing enrollments.

Merchants look at redevelopment opportunity to ask city planners and designers of the downtown redevelopment project how the plan would affect thier businesses during an open meeting Wednesday night at the Wareham Hotel.

Gary Stith, city planner, gave a brief introduction to the merchants and introduced the coordinators of the downtown redevelopment plan.

According to Stith, the redevelopment project will be developed in three phases, including streetscaping in an area designed for seating, lighting, landscaping; building facade improvements; and a plaza design which would be located at the entrance of the proposed mall at Third and Poyntz.

"It (the plaza) would be a focal point for a downtown public space that would be designed in such a way that would attract people...a space that would draw people into the downtown area," Stith said.

Stith also spoke of a few of the goals the coordinators hope to meet with the redevelopment of downtown.

"One of the things we're trying to accomplish is to make sure that the area is stabilized-that the structures are upgraded, to insure that they're maintained over a long period of time," Stith said.

Tom Keohan, full-time coordinator for the downtown project, gave a presentation which included some background and history of downtown development.

He stressed the importance of using available assets, such as existing buildings and designs, to keep the character and integrity of downtown Manhattan.

"One of the goals of the downtown design project is to put together a profitable combination of history, aesthetics, and business," Keohan said.

Keohan then opened the meeting to the merchants to ask questions and make suggestions for downtown redevelopment.

A few of the suggestions involved the designation of more trees in parking areas, the placement of benches and seating throughout the area, building an information center, and the upgrading of handicapped ramps.

Stith said this meeting was the beginning of a series of workshops which will be available for downtown business merchants to have input into the redevelopment of

Soviets increase troops in Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — The Kremlin poured 20,000 to 22,000 soldiers into Afghanistan in the past two weeks, pushing Soviet troop strength past the 100,000 mark in the face of relentless guerrilla warfare and widespread Afghan desertions, a Western diplomatic report said Wednesday.

If confirmed, the deployment would represent the largest movement of Soviet troops into Afghanistan since Moscow launched its intervention with 85,000 men in December 1979 to try to put down a Moslem revolt against the communist regime in Kabul.

Another diplomatic report said the troops appeared to be reinforcements, and estimated their number at 10,000. The diplomats, who requested anonymity, said the Soviet forces have taken over security duties in Kabul from four Afghan army divisions believed transferred to "hot" insurgency fronts.

Fistfight gives union black eye

WASHINGTON — Several coal mine owners said Wednesday it could be weeks before bargaining resumes with the striking United Mine Workers union, while some union officials said a fist fight between President Sam Church and his safety director had given their organization a black eye.

Church, who has called the union's 39-member Bargaining Council to meet with him Friday in Washington, mixed it up with Everett Acord on the street Tuesday outside the union's Washington offices. They apparently were fighting over a letter Acord wrote to ranking union officers complaining about Church's decision to lay off union safety officials, including Acord.

"He called me a no-good, rotten SOB and Lord knows what else," Acord said Wednesday. Church refused to talk with reporters.

The strike was in its 13th day Wednesday.

"Psychologically, I think no matter what came out right now, it wouldn't be ratified," said Herbert Jones, president of Amherst Coal Co. in Charleston, W.Va. "The other (defeated) contract was so expensive and yet it was defeated so soundly."

Omar Bradley, last 5-star general, dies

NEW YORK — Gen. Omar Bradley, who led a million U.S. soldiers in World War II and was the nation's last five-star general, died Wednesday at the age of 88, Pentagon officers said in Washington.

He died at a hospital in New York City, the officers said.

His last public appearance was at President Reagan's inauguration. The aging general was wheeled onto a stage in a wheelchair by actor Jimmy Stewart.

Tall, scholarly, soft-spoken, Bradley was regarded as one of the greatest field generals of World War II. Known as the "doughboys" general" because he was thrifty with the blood and lives of his men, the master of military tactics was proud of his record of winning battles with minimum losses.

His million-man command was the largest in American history and included most U.S. troops in Germany.

Bradley died of a stroke at 7:30 p.m. EST at St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York City, with his wife, Kitty, at his side, said Army Secretary John Marsh Jr. and Army Chief of Staff Gen. E.C. Meyer.

Bradley had remained on active duty and had been in the Army almost 70 years, more than any other U.S. serviceman, and spent the last 30 years as general of the Army.

Astronauts 'ready to fly' Friday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - Astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen arrived here Wednesday "ready to fly" a historic mission aboard the reflyable rocketship Columbia. They relaxed by doing acrobatics in trainer jets and work to prepare the shuttle was ahead of schedule.

Launch managers said all was go for dawn-6:50 a.m. EST to be precise-on Friday.

After dinner with their boss, the astronauts went to bed at 6:15 p.m. EST, an early wakeup awaiting them. On the launch pad, activities were ahead of schedule after early countdown delays.

Young, who has been in space four times before, said he brought enough clothes from home in Houston to last a month-his way of making sure there would be a Friday launch. "Every other time," he explained, "I never brought enough and always had to stay

The countdown, rebounding from a trouble-plagued start, was ahead of schedule. The weather was predicted to be fine.

The forecast calls for the sun to shine today, but you may have trouble seeing it through the haze of President Reagan's new guidelines on auto emissions. High will be in the low to mid-70s.

Gun control in Emporia

Despite the recent attempt on President Reagan's life, Emporia residents overwhelmingly rejected an advisory referendum which proposed the tightening of handgun regulations. Of the nearly 5,000 votes cast in Tuesday's referendum, 3,537 were in opposition.

The referendum attracted nationwide attention since it was to take place so soon after the assassination attempt. Many believed that it would portray an outraged public ready to enact gun regulations. That predicted outrage never developed.

Thousands of dollars were spent by gun control opponents and the results proved that, at least in Emporia, their efforts were not in vain.

The money spent by groups such as the National Rifle Association, though, could not have influenced all those Emporians. Their votes represented an opposition to gun control that went deeper than opponent's advertising.

The margin of victory implies that gun control proponents are fighting an uphill battle. The results, however, must be weighed carefully. The defeat of an advisory referendum in one Kansas community may not accurately reflect the sentiment of a majority of Americans.

March is a symbol

"Women Take Back the Night" is not a new idea. It is simply an idea whose time has come to Manhattan. The march is a symbol, a statement, an affirmative action.

For me, that we walk as a group of women alone, unaccompanied men, symbolizes our recognition that we, as women, must assert our right to the night-to lives without fear of harassment, harm or attack. By marching, we are making a statement that we do indeed have a real and valid right to be able to walk our city streets at night in safety. Through this walk, we are taking a first step, a positive action, toward helping women understand that only through uniting in working toward our common goals can we hope to achieve them.

I will be marching as a woman taking back the night.

A male perspective

Editor,

We would like to respond from a male perspective to Damien Semanitzky's attack on the march organized by Women Against Rape (WAR) to "take back the night." It seems to us entirely proper to exclude men from participating in a march whose purpose is to reclaim women's freedom to walk safely and independently in this community. Indeed, inviting men to march might foster images of counter to WAR's purpose.

Men who oppose rape have alternatives to joining this particular march. We can educate men and women who believe the popular myths about rape; we can be advocates for change in laws and attitudes; we can initiate local ad hoc groups supporting, for example, improved street lighting in Manhattan. We can refuse to remain silent when people tell "rape jokes" at parties and we can stand up to anyone who treats women with contempt or violence.

The frequent problem of the unnoticed beating, often harassment, and raping of women in our society deserves our attention. Women Against Rape contributes to community awareness of the problem, while at male protectiveness that would run the same time delivering a message that women insist changes be made now. We therefore endorse the march to take back the night, and commend those who will participate in it for their courage and determination.

Social satirizing

Editor,

RE: Kevin Kneisley's letter blasting Tim Brown in Tuesday's Collegian. Your letter sounds pretty tough, Kevin, and I'm sure you and all the other Not-Ready-For-K-State-Players have a very strong social conscience that torpedos to the surface in your skits. But I think you miss Tim Brown's point. He doesn't attack your message. It's the lack of creativity in your material that is the victim of his wrath. If your skits crack as wisely as your letter, I think it would be best if you left the social satirizing to the Dan Akroyds and John Belushis of the world.

The comfort of old expressions

How many times has modern technology rendered an old expression obsolete?

Take, for instance, a pair of shoes. Once upon a time one could appreciate something that was "as comfortable as an old pair of shoes." New shoes used to be illfitted and somewhat stiff. Only after a sizeable breaking-in period could the owner feel satisfied with them. The durable construction of the shoe was such that a pair could be passed from brother to brother and generation to generation.

Today, of course, shoes need not be constructed so well. Fashion has seen to that. Everyone, I'm confident, has at least one perfectly good (albiet out-of-date) pair of shoes tucked into the back of their closet. Anyway, thanks to the marvels of good research and the advancements of technology, a good shoe should fit just as well coming out of the shoe store as it does after six months of wear.

"As comfortable as an old pair of shoes" no longer holds the connotation it once did. We need a replacement. May I suggest "as comfortable as a well-worn

The decision to acquire a new wallet did not come without serious deliberation. My old one serviced me just fine for some six years. The contour it developed was very close to me. A FRIEND gave me a new.

tough billfold a couple years ago in exchange for me standing up for him at his wedding. The wallet I was using was just barely into its first half-life so I passed the gift on to someone else.

Because my masquerades as a traveling file cabinet, those wafer-thin models were out of the question as suitable replacements. Besides, I don't really think the manufacturers are serious about the thinness of those wallets, and too, I kind of like a little bulk back there to make certain I haven't been ripped off.

My standards for a new wallet were high and I just couldn't find a suitable replacement in a retail store. That's when I thought of a friend talented in leathercraft.

Over a cup of coffee I outlined my specifications to Steve and he thought he could fix me up. He also suggested a matching checkbook cover to replace the vinyl bankprovided model. How could I refuse?

LAST WEEK Steve presented me with my new accessories and I began the ritual of emptying out my old, worn-out wallet. In it were credit card tissues dating back to 1977, addresses and telephone numbers that no longer held any meaning, an expired driver's license and old insurance records.

After reassembling my collection of relevant cards and records in their new home, I realized what a terrible torture I was in for. The remaining contents still presented a sizeable package. The thickness of the inflexible leather was such that it should wear well into the next century. The lump in my rear pocket made simple sitting a new challenge. Adding the matching checkbook only compounded my

To get the wallet to stay folded, I have taken to sticking it under my mattress at night. The billfold is approaching acceptable compression levels. Who knows what will happen if money ever finds its way inside?

My one consolation is that once my new wallet is broken in, it should be comfortable for a long,

Column against march criticized...

Editor.

We are very concerned about the attitude of Damien Semanitzky toward Woman Against Rape (WAR). It is hard for us to imagine how a woman who claims to have been raped could be so insensitive to the needs of rape victims.

Concerning Semanitzky's argument about WAR excluding her acquaintences from the meetings, we ask this question: Were her acquaintences rape victims, citizens concerned about rape or journalists? We are certain that Semanitzky is able to empathize with the embarrassment and fear that prevent rape victims from wanting their experiences publicized, especially in a college paper which is read by their peers.

We can understand the importance of WAR wanting to organize the march fully before the press gets hold of it simply to save a lot of confusion and misun-derstanding. Semanitzky wrote, "PR doesn't work that way folks." Isn't it a shame it doesn't.

It is ironic that Semanitzky claims the leaders of WAR refuse to be quoted with their names on the record. In fact, although WAR has no leaders, many of the groups members have been quoted with their names in the Collegian before.

WAR admittedly does not deal with the aftermath of rape because the Women's Regional Crisis Center offers free counseling to rape victims as well as support to for the woman who makes the decision to face her assailant in court. The group also works closely with the police department.

WAR is mainly concerned with the prevention of rape through promoting the knowledge of self-defense, which includes carrying whistles and developing physical defense capabilities.

"Marching through the streets like a bunch of paranoid idiots," is a ridiculous and uncompassionate way to describe a brave group of women who care enough to show their concern for rape victims like you. Is walking through Aggieville to proclaim a message to the city of Manhattan the behavior of "paranoid idiots?"

We hope the march this Saturday will have a significant impact on the public and remind them they too can be a victim of rape. Maybe next time Leslie will decide not to walk four blocks to Scott's apartment Saturday night alone, and will be saved from being raped. This alone would make WAR's march worthwhile.

We challenge Semanitzky and everyone else to march with us.

Editor.

In response to Damien Semanitzky's vicious article attacking the Women Against Rape (WAR) organization, I would like to say that as a rape victim I would like to think anyone would commend a group that is making an effort to combat this violent crime. I would like to clear up some misconceptions that Semanitzky presented in her article.

I cannot speak as an authority for WAR, but in the two meetings that I have attended I found no evidence or desire to exclude anyone, including men, press or otherwise, from these meetings. Moreover, public and new member attendance is encouraged, by evidence of advertisements in newspaper media, such as the "Something About the Women" newsletter, where I first heard about the organization. Articles have also been presented in the Collegian.

Meetings advertised in a newspaper are not "secret", as Semanitzky stated. During the meetings, the group presented in-formation that work is being done with the county and campus police, particularly with the upcoming march. Working with and getting the cooperation of the legal system and its officials is not always easy, however, as anyone who has ever tried to work with the system would understand. Changes in the system occur slowly. A good example of this are changes in the treatment of rape victims which have gradually improved due to concerned citizens and groups taking action.

Furthermore, it costs the rape victim nothing monetarily to take a rape case to court. The state is the prosecutor, not the victim, as it is in any capital offense. The victim is merely classified as a witness. Therefore, the state pays the legal fees. There is no monetary reason for a rape victim to let the attack go unreported.

Semanitzky's experiences with matter do not qualify her to speak on this subject. I would advise her to validate her statements in the future.

Furthermore, I plan to attend the Women Take Back the Night march, and I urge others to attend. Marches are not immediate solutions to problems, but they do stimulate public awareness and they have impact. After all, they were instrumental in bringing home thousands of soldiers from the Vietnam war.

...and again

As a woman who knows the fear of leaving my house alone at night, as a woman who knows that even my own home is not a fortress against the insult and injury of rape, I feel very deeply the need to state, to affirm my belief in the need for women symbolically taking back the night.

For so many years and centuries, we, as women have been told and told and finally made to believe that we are a passive entity. We become socialized and finally take on the passive role for acceptance into this society. (i.e., babies respond actively to their surroundings whether they are male or female.) As women begin to realize the potential for responding actively, we also begin to see and feel the need to respond to our environment in such a fashion. We do that as effectively and productively as this society will allow us.

Rape is not an issue that affects only women. It affects us all. To deal with an issue that has such widespread effects as rape, all people need to get involved-take an active stance against rape. For people to get involved, for people to face the issue, they need to know it exists as a very real and potentially harmful act that touches their individual lives.

By marching, as women, to take back the night, we are symbolically stating our goal-to be able to walk safely after dark alone, and making the means of awareness and information available to the community. It is only when the community cares enough to respond to the atrocity of rape actively that we can even begin to deal w it effectively.

Women Against Rape is an organization of women who care enough about themselves (ourselves) and others, to respond actively to the pain and injury that results when any woman is raped.

I am a woman who cares enough to act. I will be marching to take back the night.

Senators begin work on tentative allocations lengthy process of tentative allocations during tonight's meeting.

Senate is working with estimated revenues for the 1982 fiscal year totaling $817,373, according to Susan Angle, coordinator of student activities. This includes an estimated $414,592 for the fall semester enrollment; $391,789 estimated for the spring semester; and $10,992 from the fiscal 1981 balance.

Tentative allocations are scheduled for five nights during April, Angle said, but with few cuts in budget requests recommended from the Finance Committee, the amount of discussion experienced in the past is not expected and the process may be finished in three sessions.

The tentative allocations process involves a line-by-line analysis of each group's itemized budget request. The Finance Committee, after previous hearings with each group, has prepared a report for each budget making recommendations for funding.

The five groups on the agenda for tonight's first session are the FONE Crisis Center, the Parachute Club, Student Publications, Students for Handicapped Concerns and University For Man.

The Finance Committee recommendations are lower than the budget

Student senators will begin tackling the requests for each of the five groups engthy process of tentative allocations scheduled tonight except Student Publications. This year, Student Publications is requesting continuation of its $3 line item from full-time students in addition to a $1 line item request from parttime students. The committee has recommended funding from the part-time student activity fee.

Tentative allocations are not finalized until fall because the budget is based on estimates for the fiscal year, according to Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman.

An unallotted account is kept as a 'cushion," Angle said, when working with the spring enrollment estimate after allocations are finalized in the fall.

Before senate can begin the tentative allocations-process, one bill remains on the agenda from the last meeting. Mortar Board has requested $105.75 to cover its programs during the All-University Open House, March 27-28. Although it was suggested the bill be moved to special orders for a vote, senate did not pass the motion and will need to decide on the issue before addressing the allocations process.

Senate hearings will resume again next Tuesday and Thursday beginning at 6 p.m., one hour earlier than regular senate meetings.

Mitchell resigns position; accepts MU chairmanship

Roger Mitchell, professor of agronomy, has been named chairman of the Department of Agronomy at the University of Missouri effective May 1.

The resignation and new appointment was confirmed by Mitchell after President Duane Acker mentioned the expected change Wednesday at a news conference.

"It is useful to me to be there as soon as possible," Mitchell said, in order to participate in a re-evalutation of the priorities within the department at MU. The new dean of agriculture at the college is beginning a long-range planning process, he said.

The former vice president of agriculture at K-State, said his departure has nothing to do with last year's reorganization of the administration of the University's agricultural programs.

"I thoroughly enjoy working in administration," he said. "This new position is an opportunity in an administrative job."

It is common for an administrator to go back to full-time teaching and research for short periods of time, he said.

An executive officer of Mid-America International Agricultural Consortium, Mitchell said he has completed his teaching responsibilites for the semester.

Mitchell will be returning to the job he left in 1972. He served as chairman of the agronomy department at MU from 1969 to 1972. He was dean of extension at MU until he came to K-State in 1975.

Reagan could return home Friday

Reagan, showing continued improvement with no sign of complications from his gunshot wound, probably will be ready to return to the White House as early as Friday-and no later than Monday, a key physician said Wednesday.

"He will not be chopping wood next week," but Reagan should be able to put in a couple hours of work at his desk each day, said Dr. Dennis O'Leary, dean of clinical affairs at George Washington University Hospital where Reagan is recuperating.

The president likely will be recovered 100 percent within four months, O'Leary estimated, adding: "He might do a little better."

The president signed a proclamation designating the week of April 19 as "Victims Rights Week," calling attention to the needs of victims of crime.

It made no mention of Reagan's own case. He also signed an executive order creating an advisory committee to find ways to give states some powers and responsibilities now held by the federal government. The panel will be headed by close friend and fellow conservative Paul Laxalt, a Republican senator from Nevada.

Satellite transmission channels into viewing

Collegian Reporter

Recent technological advancements have literally brought the world to your living room through television sets.

Satellite communications, especially television programming, has emerged almost overnight.

Dozens of satellites are perched high above the earth, relaying voice, data and television signals to millions of viewers around the world. With the aid of a sophisticated system, suitably called an earth station, private homes and cable companies acquire their tickets to the world, drawing communications from across the globe.

By GORDON DOWELL leasing the right to install the antenna system.

> In an effort to keep costs down, Schweitzer's installation transmits only one channel, WTBS of Atlanta. Schweitzer said he requested permission from the station to rebroadcast its signal.

> Tenants of the park are now capable of receiving six television stations—five local and the satellite-transmitted broadcast, Schweitzer said. The local signals are received by several antennas on an antenna

> "There will be a rush to see who can produce the equipment at the lowest cost most efficiently. Whoever wins the race will realize some real profits," said Keith Ebel,

With such a system, a private viewer can receive nearly 200 channels, far more than available through cable companies or local geographic areas.

THREE BASIC COMPONENTS are required in an earth station system: An antenna, a low noise amplifier (LNA) and a microwave satellite receiver. All three units are connected by coaxial cable.

A brief and simplified expose on satellite communication follows. The material comes from an information manual written by Space Research, a Florida-based firm, represented by Fred Shimp of Morganville.

According to the manual, "each component performs a specific function and, depending upon materials and cost, can greatly influence the signal reception.

"The antenna receives the faint microwave signal of satellites in space, pinpoints the beam and reflects the wave signal through a horn-shaped aperature called a 'horn.

"From here the signal is accepted into the LNA. The LNA amplifies the weak signal (100,000 times) without causing a great deal of deterioration of noise.

"The new amplified signal then travels into the microwave satellite receiver. Here the signal frequency, satellite channel, is selected and converted into usable video and audio (voice, data or picture) for television's use.

KEN SCHWEITZER, a Riley native who specializes in television service and antenna work, installed a receiving dish at the Walnut Mobil Home Park east of Manhattan in February, 1980.

The $8,000 system, which Schweitzer said is "below average" cost-wise for home use, was added to supplement the existing system. Before, the mobil home park was without any type of commercial cable television.

The system currently has 50 subscribers among the 150 tenants, he said. The only legal implication he encountered was junior in electrical engineering and local antenna salesman.

Ebel said the communication satellites are positioned in an orbital slot 22,300 miles above the equator. At this distance, he said, the satellites' orbits are "geostationary."

IF THEY WERE AT an altitude closer than 22,300 miles, they would out-rotate the earth. If they were positioned further out in space, they would rotate slower than the earth. In both cases, the satellites would miss their targets of transmission on the earth, Ebel said.

Small jets on board each satellite are used for occasional realignment, he said. The satellites are controlled from the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasedena, Calif.

Microwaves are used in satellite transmission because they have avaiable area (bandwidth) to transmit thousands of voice circuits plus several television channels. In addition, microwaves are not significantly affected by local weather conditions, the ionsphere or sun spot activity.

If the satellite is equipped with a broadbeam antenna, the signal can be originated and received over one-third of the earth's surface. Coverage can be limited to certain areas by using narrower or shaped antennas on the satellites, the manual said.

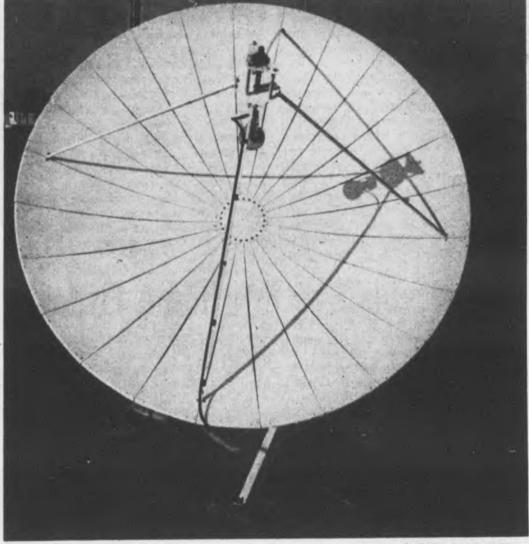

DIRECTIONAL AND SPECIFICALLY shaped antennas provide the desired coverage to and from the satellite without wasting power by radiating it into space, according to the manual.

The satellite signal reaches the earth with about five watts of power, Ebel said. This is comparable to a Citizens' Band (CB) radio.

"Each home will be hooked-up through the satellite dish," Ebel said, speculating on the future. "Any type of communication will be up-linked (transmitted) and down-linked (received) through your satellite dish."

Eventually, he said, the system will be hooked into a computer.

"Perfection and price reduction will cause these changes," he said.

Looking toward the heavens...On a hill between the Walnut Grove Trailer Park and Highway 24 a small satellite receiver has been working since early 1980. The dish cost approximately $8000 to purchase the dish and install it.

According to Ebel, the recent frenzy over earth stations began with the 1972 deregulation by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) of the Television Receive-Only (TVRO) industry.

Rewriting of the Copyright Act of 1934 allowed the industry room for expansion. Television networks and local cable companies are now battling in court with companies who supply earth station systems to private users, frantically trying to retain their foothold on the industry, Ebel said.

"A ruling has already been made by the FCC to allow TVRO and now they (the plaintiffs) are trying to limit this use," he

At 26, Ebel has been associated with the antenna business for 10 years and has become acquainted with satellites during the past year. He is the local representative for Antenna Masters, a company which handles all types of antenna systems, ranging from commercial to residential.

EBEL'S BASIC SYSTEM, a do-it-yourself kit, carries a $3,950 price tag. Some systems run as high as $20,000.

"If you're enterprising and really scratch, you can probably get down to $2,500 or $2,700," he said.

Bob McKinley of Axtell spent $6,800 for a system in November and now "we very seldom watch anything else."

"We watch the local news at 5:30 and watch (the programs) the satellite system the rest of the night," he said. He said he enjoys the commercial-free, noninterrupted viewing.

McKinley said he had read extensively about the systems before traveling to an earth station seminar in Houston, Texas where he decided to get the system. He has since went into sales and calls his company the North Star Satellite TV Systems.

"It (satellite reception) is really going to catch on, especially in rural areas where there's not that much (channel) selection," McKinley said.

With his receiving dish mounted on a trailer, McKinley said he has traveled extensively, giving demonstrations throughout the Axtell area north of Manhattan. The McKinley family watches the Satcom I satellite because, as McKinley said, TV Guide lists the broadcasts.

ACCORDING TO McKINLEY, the three major components of the system are about equal in cost. The dish, LNA and receiver each constitute about one-third of the total McKinley said a group of neighbors could go together in a joint venture and purchase a dish and connect their homes into the system.

However, he said, one person couldn't buy the system, "wire his block" and collect a fee. Such action, he said, would violate cable television laws.

Cable companies and networks are not worried about earth station expansion into rural areas, only in towns where cable companies, in particular, stand to lose a great deal of revenue, McKinley said.

He said his system of 24 channels has "better selection and quality than city

McKinley holds one regret about buying his system and getting involved with sales. "I wish I would have done it sooner," he

GARY ROBINSON, Manhattan Radio Shack employee, said a move is underway to scramble the satellite signals. In order to watch the programming, he said, the viewer will have to rent a device, (called a decoder) which unscrambles the signal. In order to retain the decoder, the viewer will have to pay a rental fee.

Satellite reception of news expected in Manhattan

The Kansas State Collegian, along with other Manhattan news media, may soon receive satellite reception of The Associated Press (AP) wire service in an effort to modernize current receiving techniques.

According to Bill Brown, director of Student Publications, the new transmitting service will eventually be installed at no extra cost but no time has been set to receive it.

When Manhattan finally receives its reception system, there will be "no difference in the product," Brown said, only a "difference in the transmission."

The AP, a U.S. based worldwide news gathering service, is presently phasing out communication via American Telephone and Telegraph Co. telephone lines. It has opted to use earth-based transmitters and orbiting satellites coupled with receiving dishes throughout the country.

Fred Moen, chief of the Kansas City bureau of the AP, cites physical and economical reasons for the switch to satellites with the AP being able to deliver better service at a lower cost.

THE AP HAS INSTALLED 200 of the saucer-shaped dishes and has received authorization for 900 of the units nationwide. Ultimately, Moen said, the AP intends to own and operate a receiving dish in every city which has an AP member.

The date for Manhattan to receive a dish is uncertain, according to Roger Hamilton, program director for sister radio stations KMAN and KMKF.

Hamilton, who recently met with an AP official, said the acquisition of a receiving dish for the city is a "sure thing" but its installation is a "matter of

"I hope within a couple of years we can see more progress," he said. Bill Felber, editor of The Manhattan

Mercury, shares the optimistic view of the city converting to satellite reception of the AP news service. The Mercury, along with the Collegian, KMAN-KMKF and KSAC-KSDB are the four Manhattan AP subscribers and would share one

"We know it is going to happen and it will probably happen within the next couple years," Felber said of the dish installment.

The time required for installation of the receiving equipment ranges up to "a few months," Moen said. "It's a matter of getting the equipment."

THE SWITCH TO SATELLITE reception is mandatory only because "land lines" will be phased out, said Moen, who's bureau serves the five-state area of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

The radio signal is being transmitted from earth and reflected off Westar III satellite positioned 22,300 miles above the equator. The "space" on the satellite, as Moen called it, is rented from Western Union, owner of the satellite.

The AP presently transmits photographs and various types of in-formation including general news, sports and several financial reports through the ultra-modern system, Moen said.

Moen said The Topeka Daily Capital-Journal has a receiving dish system in operation. The construction process is underway on a unit at Hutchinson and preliminary work has been done at Wichita concerning a future installation.

Before Manhattan can receive a dish, local officials must determine a location site. Once the site is picked and the AP decides to install a receiving unit; satellite reception is just around the corner, Hamilton said.

(See SATELLITE, p.9)

Satellite...

Earth station reception in this area is especially good because the satellite's beaming point (the central point of the main signal) is located near Concordia, about 80 miles northwest of Manhattan, Robinson said.

The radiation pattern is called a "footprint."

He said the "best" reception occurs within a 300-mile radius of this foot-print and a "fair" signal can be obtained up to 100 miles away from this point.

Gene Step of Manhattan's Acme Radio Supply expects the industry to expand with sales through mail order programs. He said prices will drop within five years.

"I don't have the cash volume to go that high to keep them in stock," he said of his reluctance to keep the dish systems on hand.

CHARLES COOKE, manager of Manhattan's cable television firm says the earth station development has "created a boom period for cable TV—particularly in large cities," and has increased the demand for pay-TV (Showtime) in Manhattan.

Cooke's "pure conjecture" estimates within five years satellite signals will be scrambled by the originator of the service. This is his only "forseen control" of an otherwise free market to individuals wishing to tap the signals.

Jack Burke, KSAC radio manager, headquartered in McCain Auditorium, said the dish on the south side of the auditorium was activated on Feb. 12, 1980.

Transmissions originate through the National Public Radio Network based in New York. The K-State unit is not designed to transmit, although many similar systems can transmit, Burke said.

The "receive-only" station is used exclusively for KSAC, Burke said. There are no K-State classes presently involved with the system although KSDB-FM, the student radio station, receives satellite programming.

BURKE DESCRIBED earth stations as a "very active industry (which is) getting to be a real hot item."

Dealers conclude ownership will be initially prohibited by a system's high cost, but competition within the industry and technological advancements will ultimately bring them within the financial limits of the majority of the population. The consensus among earth station dealers and users is that their costs will decline in the future much like costs for calculators and digital watches have.

The progress of the earth stations is "half way between adolescence and voice changing," Ebel said.

Senate bill sets scholarship limits

TOPEKA (AP) — A bill scaling down a nearly $4 million state scholarship program for medical students at the University of Kansas Medical Center was easily passed by the Kansas Senate on Wednesday.

The measure was approved, 37-3, and will now go to the House for consideration.

The medical scholarship bill was designed to address concerns about the cost of the program, which is now about $3.68 million a year for the more than 550 students which received scholarships.

A limit of 100 scholarships for each class would be made under the Senate bill. There are now no limits on the four-year-old program, and about 150 are given to each class of 200, according to Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta).

The program offers two types of scholarships in exchange for an agreement by students to practice medicine in certain areas of Kansas.

'80s are time of transition

KCC establishes special division

Collegian Reporter

The 1980s are a crucial time of transition in American energy policy, according to Pete Loux, chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC)

"I can assure you the KCC is not conducting business as usual," he said.

Loux spoke to delegates of the 1981 state convention of the League of Women Voters of Kansas at a luncheon Wednesday in the

To meet the demands of the state's needs, a special projects division was established within the KCC, Loux said. The KCC is the state agency that regulates utilities.

The division is examining five areas within the KCC's responsibility including: electric-load research and management, residential conservation, computer services, telephone services and a program to monitor the Wolf Creek project.

THE ELECTRIC-LOAD project was established to study rates and practices and to encourage load management and conservation in order to reduce peak demands, Loux said.

Some of the proposals in this area include remote-control timers for appliances and new electric rates, which would be designed to correspond with the time of day and seasonal demand periods.

Kansas City Power and Light (KCPL) has conducted experiments that have cut off power to air conditioners for a few minutes each hour. There was a dramatic decrease in energy consumption, but no noticeable change in comfort, Loux said.

"KCPL and KPL (Kansas Power and Light) are studying the possiblility of what is called subscription demand," Loux said.

This system would enable each consumer to set a demand peak, and if it were exceeded, a circuit breaker would be tripped and the consumer would have to turn something off.

A statewide Residential Conservation Service is being established by KCC to inform consumers, through educational programs, what services they are entitled to under the National Energy Conservation Policy Act of 1978. The act requires large utilities to provide voluntary services for consumers such as energy audits, in-

THE COMPUTER SERVICES of the KCC are being updated to help the commission respond to the public more efficiently, Loux said.

Bills pending in the state Legislature would set a time limit on the commission's ability to rule on a rate hike, he said. If the commission did not act within the time limit, the increase would automatically go into effect. The updated computer system will give KCC the capability to gather information fast enough make a decision within the proposed time period.

The special projects division has also formed a special task force to examine the recent Federal Communication Commission's decision to split American Telephone and Telegraph and its operating companies and its effect on the jurisdiction of the KCC, Loux said.

Bennett's determination key factor to success

Collegian Reporter

Six years ago, Brenda Bennett walked off the Sterling High tennis courts ready to hang up her racket forever.

Having difficulty with a coach who was interested only in a men's team. Bennett vowed she would never play again. But she and her father decided she really couldn't quit, so Bennett went back to make the team as a sophomore.

Today K-State's No. 2 singles player is certainly not a quitter.

"She's got so much guts, she'll play bleeding," coach David Hacker said. "Last year she was playing at Wichita State with a bad back when she should have been in a hospital under sedation."

Instead she had her mom walk on her back and she continued playing.

OTHER THAN THE coaching she's had at tennis practices, Bennett has never had a formal tennis lesson. Most of her accomplishments in tennis are because of sheer determination, according to Hacker.

"Brenda is a great pretender," he said. "She's never hit an orthodox shot in her life. But there's no player on the team that will get as many balls back.

"She'll dig concrete between her toes to get the ball back, making up in pluck and luck what other players have in skill and talent," Hacker said. "Just watching her play, you'd never pick her to win anything, but she's been the most consistent player in the three years I've been here."

"I won't give up," Bennett said, describing what makes her a consistent player. "I'm not a real good loser, so I just

AND WITH AGGRESSION in every swing, stroke and serve, Bennett goes for it.

"If I were in a closetful of skunks and I needed some help, I'd take Brenda into that closet wth me and she'd whip those skunks' asses," Hacker said. "She's just that type of Although her aggression is an asset, Bennett believes it's the one thing she needs to improve most.

"I need to get better control of my temperament," she said. "But sometimes it's beneficial because it makes me concentrate

During the 1980 spring season, Bennett, a junior in recreation and business, placed seventh in the No. 5 singles and seventh in the No. 3 doubles at the Big 8 Championships. She said her goal this year is to improve those finishes.

ACCORDING TO BENNETT, the women's squad had no organized practices before spring break.

"We're more ready than we've ever been before as far as team quality goes," she said. "We could have used a lot more time, rather than one match. The other teams have been playing more competitively."

Playing for K-State for three years, Bennett believes the tennis program could use improvement.

"The tennis program here needs more attention," she said. "It deserves it. Compared to what other schools have, we're way behind. We've got a lot more than my freshman year, but not enough. When you have to beg for a pair of shoes, it's pretty bad."

With plans to keep swinging her racket, Bennett said she would like to stay involved in tennis in the future, possibly being involved with a racquetball club or sporting goods store.

Big 8 meet to open today

With a goal of trying to prove the league coaches wrong, the K-State women's tennis team opens play today in the Big 8 championships in Oklahoma City. The tournament will conclude Friday.

According to the coaches poll, Oklahoma State will win it all, with Oklahoma predicted for second and Colorado third. K-State is picked to finish last.

"We're going in as the No. 1 underdog," coach David Hacker said. "But they're going down there to show the Big 8 something."

The team's only competition this spring has been against Emporia State, which it downed 8-1 last weekend.

Tamera Peugh will play No. 1 singles for the Wildcats; Brenda Bennett holds the No. 2 spot; and Candie Gwin takes the No. 3 position. Kathy Manning, Kris Breisch and Sherry Nelson line up in the Nos. 4 through 6 singles spots.

Safe at second...K-State's Kris Williams looks back for the umpire's ball at second base during the first game. K-State won both games over signal after Missouri Western's shortstop, Julie Sherwood, dropped the Missouri Western, 3-2 and 7-0.

Collegian Reporter In the bottom of the seventh and one run down, K-State's Lisa Packard went to the plate and hit an inside-the-park home run with pinch runner Gail Seiler on first base to win the first game of a doubleheader against Missouri Western State (MWSC) 3-2 Wedneday at Cico Park in college softball.

K-State easily took the second game by a score of 7-0.

In the first game, the Griffins scored two runs in the second inning and then held the 'Cats scoreless until the third when Julie Laughery singled to center field to allow Kris Williams to score from second.

In the fourth Sherrie Johnston replaced Farris as pitcher and retired the next six walked and was replaced by pinch runner Seiler, who made it to third on a sacrifice bunt by Melanie Lees. Then Packard stepped up and hit her home run to win the game for K-State.

Johnston got the win, allowing only two hits, and Wonda Berry was the loser, giving up seven hits.

In the second game the Wildcats stepped out to a 2-0 lead in the first and kept that margin until the bottom of the fifth.

Then the Packard walked, and Leslie McGinnis followed with a single to left field and then Pat Howard singled to the shortstop. The shortstop made an error and the bases were loaded.

Packard scored on Williams's sacrifice fly to left and pitcher Janel Anderson singled to center field to bring in McGinnis and Howard. This gave K-State three unearned runs for the inning and a 5-0 lead.

THE WILDCATS held the Griffins scoreless again in the sixth. During the 'Cats

AT THE 'CATS' turn at bat Williams half of the frame, Packard connected again to left center for her second inside-the-park home run, this time with Cindy Wasinger on first. That made the score 7-0 and MWSC was unable to score in the seventh.

K-State's Anderson got the win by allowing only four hits and getting four strike outs while the Griffins Beth Kemmer allowed nine hits and had three errors to get the loss.

K-State coach Charlotte Michal said the Griffins were a good team. "They played better the first game than they did the second," Michal said. "They also haven't played as many games as we have and I think they will do a lot of improving."

As for K-State's performance, Michal was very pleased.

"We played very good all the way," she said. "Lisa Packard had two great games."

"Things are beginning to click for us," she said. "The girls are also learning more about each other and feeling better about things too."

'Cat men, women to play in chairs

The K-State men's and women's basketball teams may be at a considerable disadvantage tonight when they take to the court in wheelchairs to play the Kansas Chairmen at 7:30 in Ahearn Field House.

This is the third time the Wildcats will be at the mercy of the nationally-ranked wheelchair team from Topeka.

The men will have a chair on the court in the first half, with the women taking their turn at the more experienced Chairmen in the second half.

The game, which originally was intended as a fund-raiser, also serves to heighten awareness of the problems faced by handicapped students on campus. Sponsored by Students for Handicapped Concerns, proceeds are earmarked for K-State's shuttle service and other programs for physically limited students.

Baseball openers set at 8 more ballparks

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS More than a quarter of a million fans are expected at baseball stadiums across America Thursday as the major league season picks up momentum with eight games scheduled, four in each league.

The 1980 season officially opened Wednesday in Cincinnati with the Reds defeating the defending world champions, the Philadelphia Phillies, 3-2.

Thursday's largest crowd is expected at New York where 55,000 will jam Yankee Stadium to watch Tommy John work for the home team against Jon Matlack of the Texas Rangers.

John, 22-9 in 1980, is the winningest pitcher in baseball over the last two seasons with 43 victories and just 18 losses since signing as a free agent with the Yankees following the 1978 season. Matlack was 10-10 for the Rangers last year.

Elsewhere, Los Angeles and San Francisco anticipate crowds of at least 50,000 each for their National League openers and about 50,000 will be on hand at Detroit for the Tigers' opener against Toronto.

Cats sign pair

As expected, K-State signed prepsters Kenny Williams and Eddie Elder to NCAA national basketball letters of intent Wed-

Williams, a 6-4 guard from Chicago-St. Joseph's, averaged 18 points and five assists a game last year. A consensus all-state player, he was considered one of the best pure shooters in Illinois.

Williams chose K-State over Illinois, Illinois State, DePaul, Bradley and Iowa State.

Elder, a scrawny 6-8, 180-pounder, averaged 22 points a game last year for Cascia Hall in Tulsa, Okla. He shot 56 percent from the field and added 13 rebounds a game.

"Both are outstanding young college prospects," Wildcat coach Jack Hartman said. "Probably most impressive, both Kenny and Eddie not only have excellent basketball skills, but they also are products of solid high school programs."

Williams and Elder were the only two players K-State wanted to sign Wednesday. And while they were after the two, Wichita State was busy signing Greg Dreiling, the highly-touted 7-2 center from Wichita Kapaun-Mount Carmel. Dreiling, as he has said he would since last November, signed a letter of intent with the Shockers.

Kansas also landed a top-notch player Wednesday in 6-4 guard Tad Boyle, a 23point scorer from Central High in Greeley, Wichita's other blue-chip prospect, 6-4 guard Aubrey Sherrod, did not sign Wednesday. Sherrod, who has narrowed his choices to K-State and Wichita State, will probably make a decision early next week.

At San Francisco, the National League's two newest managers go against each other with Frank Howard piloting the reconstucted San Diego Padres against Frank Robinson and the Giants.

In Thursday's other National League openers, Montreal plays at Pittsburgh with 40,000 expected at Three Rivers Stadium, and the New York Mets visit the Chicago Cubs with about 36,000 anticipated at Wrigley Field.

In the other American League openers, Oakland plays at Minnesota with 25,000 expected, and a crowd of 35,000 is anticipated at the Seattle Kingdome where California plays the Mariners in a night

Woman's struggle for success generates criticism, admiration development parallels the growth of her country, while reflecting some views of the United States that may remain pertinent even today.

Rainer Werner Fussbinder, one of the four leading German New Wave directors, effectively depicts the era through the characters in an intense study of motivation. He has created a film with a balanced composition of character study and sophisticated comedy enveloped in a beautifully aesthetic quality.

Hanna Schygulla gives a powerful portrayl of Maria as an intriguing, complex woman, and has rightfully received several awards for her performance.

Maria is a paratypical Don Quixote. She accepts all consequences in the name of the distant love she has for her husband, who is separated from her by war and eventually by prison. She decides that while she is waiting for him to be released, she will build a life for the two of them, and proceeds to gain independence with little regard to emotion.

Those around her are forever comparing themselves to her, either in admiration of her drive or in criticism of her desires. In response to the criticism, Maria explains that happy people appear to be indecent to those who are unhappy.

Senate amends waste bill

TOPEKA (AP) — Less than a week after it cleared the upper chamber, the Kansas Senate passed a bill Wednesday amending a measure which toughens state laws regulating hazardous waste storage and disposal.

The hazardous waste bill was approved by the Senate last Friday, and had been sent to the governor early this week for his consideration after the House agreed to concur with technical changes.

However, a drafting error in the proposal prompted the upper chamber to quickly push through another bill correcting the problem. It was passed without opposition, 40-0, and now goes to the House.

Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains) said the amendments change the original bill to properly state that violations of the waste law carry a fine of up to $25,000 a day instead of $10,000.

The law, however, does provides that the director of the Division of Environment can levy a daily fine of up to $10,000 against persons who illegal dump hazardous waste.

In addition, the amendments clarify that the attorney general can be called in to help enforce any provisions of the law.

The Senate also passed and sent to the governor a bill which requires that the state pay for the cost of care for parole violaters kept in county jails. Currently the law requires counties to pick up the cost of keeping the parole violaters for the first 14 days of their confinement. The bill is estimated to cost the state about $19,000 a year.

Another bill unanimously passed and sent to the House would raise the fee for registering as a lobbyist in the Legislature from $10 to $15. It also changes the law to force payment of the fee for each group a lobbyist represents. Currently, the fee is paid just once no matter how many groups one lobbyist represents.

Golden Key organizes at K-State

Collegian Reporter A new honor society will be established May 5 when the K-State chapter receives a charter from the Golden Key National Honor Society.

Golden Key is an honorary society which caters to upper class students who have academic exhibited outstanding achievement, said Willard Nelson, faculty adviser to Golden Key. He is also director of the Pre-Education Advisement Center and instructor of education.

This type of society is new to the University, Nelson said, because it honors students solely for academic achievements and not extra-curricular activities.

Golden Key is a national non-profit organization which currently has 20 charters throughout the United States. It was founded in 1977 at Georgia State University.

To be a Golden Key member, a student must be an undergraduate, have a minimum of a 3.4 grade point average and have 30 hours in residence at K-State. Nelson said.

ABOUT 900 letters were sent to eligible K-State students asking them to join the group. Nelson said there have been many inquiries about the society and said he is pleased at

Officers are: Mark Ward, president, junior in agricultural economics; Fred Kamla, vice president, junior in elementary education; Deana Forsyth, secretary, junior in elementary education; and Todd Gigstad, treasurer, junior in agricultural engineering.

ONE OF THE BENEFITS for joining Golden Key, Nelson said, is that each member is eligible for two $200 scholarships to be given away each school year.

One goal of Golden Key is to promote scholastic achievement at K-State, Nelson said, by tutoring other students, working in career planning, working with student recruitment or helping in the admissions

Shuttle, astronauts ready for maiden flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - On the eve of its maiden voyage, the test shuttle Columbia was poised for flight Thursday on moon-launch pad 39A, an untried ship of the future ready to return Americans to space.

Two astronauts who will stake their lives Friday on its success

(See related story, p. 13)

went to sleep at mid-afternoon Thursday following a final telephone farewell to their families. Relaxed and primed to fly, they took a call from Vice President George Bush and told him they are ready to go and "skies are clear."

At the same time, the countdown went into its climactic hours.

"I think we're go," said launch director George Page. "I think we're going to make it." Lift-off was set for 43 minutes past dawn, at 6:50 a.m. EST on Friday.

JOHN YOUNG AND Robert Crippen, who say they are "140 percent trained" for their 2-day 61/2 hour flight, visited their revolutionary spacecraft at first light Thursday, were told it was in good shape, and went off for some final landing practice in airplanes.

The astronauts were in bed at 4 p.m. for a solid sleep before the 2:05 a.m. call summoning them to space. NASA officials said the astronauts are calm and have "had no difficulty sleeping whatsoever."

After a 10-minute medical examination Friday, astronauts will breakfast on sausage, eggs, orange juice, toast and coffee, receive a final weather briefing, suit up and enter the spacecraft at 4:30 a.m.

There was nothing in the weather or the readiness of spaceship and astronauts to cause launch control any concern.

"I have a feeling we are going to go tomorrow," said John Yardley, head of the shuttle project for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "The forecast is 100 percent good."

THE WEATHER TOMORROW

should be "excellant," according to Capt. Al Duff, the Air Force's weatherman.

Brevard County sheriff's officials warned that more than a million people would jam the roadsides in the area. Some recreational vehicles had taken up prime viewing positions two days

It has been nearly six years since an astronaut with the American flag on his sleeve rocketed away from earth. America, which sent 12 men to the moon, simply left the black beyond to Russia. Forty-three cosmonauts went up while the U.S. developed the shuttle and sent explorer satellites to Mars, Saturn and beyond.

Two years behind schedule and billions over cost, the shuttle lifts the curtain on an age of useful space when mankind taps the unique properties weightlessness to create new medicines and metals and, yes, new weapons.

Yardley confirmed Thursday that without support from the Pentagon, the shuttle would still be in its hangar today. Defense officials predict that by mid-decade, the U.S. will depend on the shuttle to place and repair spy satellites, provide early warning against missile attack and to service routine military communications.

Workers' strike may delay campus building completion

A strike by Carpenter's Local 918 against Hunter and Lundberg, general contractors for the new general classroom and office building, may cause a slight delay in the completion of the building.

The strike, which began Thursday morning, involves a dispute over contract negotiations concerning wages, Charlie Cameron, the union's business representative, said.

The union and the contractors entered negotiations on a new contract April 1.

Cameron said Hunter and Lundberg offered the union a 65-cent increase over current wages, effective April 1, and an additional five-cent increase, effective Oct. 1. Hunter and Lundberg also wanted the union to sign a one-year contract, instead of the three-year contract usually offered, he

On April 4, the union voted and rejected that offer, Cameron said, asking for a 92cent increase, which would increase their hourly wages to $10.65.

"There is a possibility that we will have to come down (from that demand)," Cameron said.

HOWEVER, there disagreement between the two sides on circumstances surrounding the strike.

Bill Lundberg, of Hunter and Lundberg, said the union and the contractors were still in negotiations when the strike began.

"We had a gentlemen's agreement with the local that unless either party declared an impasse they would not strike," he said. "Supposedly we were in the process of negotiations and one offer does not end negotiations."

He denies Cameron's claim that the union made a demand in response to the contractor's

"We made an offer and the answer we got was a picket. And we don't think that's fair," he said. "I feel like the Carpenter's Local violated the agreement we had."

CAMERON ESTIMATED that eight carpenters are involved in the strike. Other craftsmen, including iron workers and plumbers, are honoring the picket, Cameron said. A total of about 20 persons are involved, he said.

Lundberg also said that eight carpenters are on strike, but because his company is also working on the construction of the city library, he said they have about 40 employees honoring the strike.

Although the union was also involved in negotiations with contractors Manhattan, they singled out Hunter and Lundberg to strike against, Lundberg said.

The next negotiation meeting will be "as soon as they (Hunter and Lundberg) call us," Cameron said.

Cameron said he had not been contacted by University officials.

Last night, Lundberg said he spoke with Cameron on Thursday and Cameron made no offer to meet with him.

THE STRIKE shouldn't last long, according to Cameron. "(We) don't look for it to last more than a week or so," he said.

The strike is not expected to delay the relocation of those offices and classes which are scheduled to move into the new building, said Vince Cool, assistant vice president for Facilities Planning. He said he is hopeful workers will be back on the job Monday.

Because the University does not deal directly with the union, it will not be involved in the negotiation process.

However, the University may get involved in the strike "if it looks like it could be an all-summer thing," Cool said. He said he would "rather not say" what measures the University could take if the strike becomes extended.

Striking Stride...Bob Dannic, a Member of Carpenter's Local 918, totes a picket sign while walking outside the general classroom and office building under construction on Mid-Campus drive. Dannic, along with other union carpenters are striking for better wages.

Publications get greatest amount

Senate grants funding to groups

By JIM LAURENCIG Collegian Reporter

Student Senate began tentative allocations last night, approving a $94,807 budget for Student Publications.

This was the largest tentative budget approval during the first session determining the 1982 fiscal budget. The approval included an increase of $3,366 over the 1980-81 allotment, funded through a $1 line item addition in the part-time student activity

"I believe the present situation is unfair to full-time students and to Student Publications," Bill Brown, director of Student Publications, said in a letter to

Until now Student Publications has been partially funded through a $3 line item from the full time student activity fee and had not received a line item increase since 1972.

SENATE ALSO approved a tentative allocation of $10,575 for the FONE Crisis Center, an increase of $1,066.50 over last year. This included a salary increase of $400 per year for the director and a salary of $2,200 per year for the assistant director.

An amendment to cut FONE's advertising budget by $86 failed. This amendment would have prohibited FONE from advertising in the Manhattan Mercury, limiting their ads to the Collegian.

FONE coordinator Lee Tomlin argued against the proposed cut.

"We also need non-student volunteers from the community to support us, and the only way we can get them is from the Mercury," Tomlin said.

University For Man (UFM) was alloted $16,415 for the upcoming year. This is an increase of $765 over the previous budget. The increases are mainly for salaries, but others were necessary to cover increased telephone and postal rates, according to Joe Rippetoe, UFM accountant.

ALSO GETTING tentative approval was a reduced budget for the Consumer Relations Board (CRB). The budget approval for $3,462.60 is $155.40 less than last year's allocation.

Legal Services was alloted an increase over last year's budget from $15,172.11 to $16,159. The majority of this increase went to a $683.89 salary boost for Kathy Lungren, Student Attorney

A special reserve account for maintenance of standing programs was also approved by senate.

LewAnn Schneider, director of the finance committee, said the new account was necessary because of a projected decline in enrollment. She said the projected decrease will limit funds available to fund existing programs.

"This account will give the groups that are going to die a chance to die a slower death," Wes Ruzek, finance committee member, said.

ADDING TO ANOTHER reserve account, senate voted to add $1,075.57 to the long range reserve account bringing it to $10,000.

Doug Kopp, representative from the Human Rights Coalition, sought funding for the newly formed group but received a negative vote from senate. Senators voiced their objections to funding a group of "controversial nature."

"A student funded group shouldn't take controversial stands and publicize them," said Doug Dodds, Student Senate chair-

The Sport Parachute Club failed to receive a $727.30 request for funding.

Mark Young, graduate in chemistry and club member, said the group has not been funded since the 1970-71 fiscal year and the student members have been paying for the activity out of their own pockets.

Senate was adamant in its refusal to fund what they consider to be a sports activity.

"We do not feel that we should fund athletic or sports groups and in the past have not been in the habit of doing so," said Mike Anderson, finance committee member.

Doctors predict Reagan's return possible for Sunday

WASHINGTON (AP) - President "return to his profession." Reagan, having his best day since he was wounded by gunfire, vowed Thursday to "suit up and come off the bench as soon as possible" to defend his economic program against alternatives shaped by House Democrats.

A doctor said the president "looks super" and "moves right along," and most likely will be ready to leave George Washington University Hospital over the weekend. Speculation focused on Sunday as the likely homecoming.

Aides said the chief executive had his "best day yet" in the hospital and is spending about two hours a day at work.

Meanwhile, James Brady, the White House press secretary who was shot in the head during the assassination attempt, was said to have joked with an aide to Vice President George Bush.

Brady's deputy, Larry Speakes, said his recovery so far was "really nothing short of a miracle." He reported that Dr. Dennis O'Leary, a top hospital official, was "extremely optimistic" that Brady could Reagan extended a morning meeting with top aides, met with congressional leaders in his spital room, and conferred with Treasury Secretary Donald Regan about the administration response to an alternative tax-reduction plan advanced by the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill).

Although the president has lost some weight, according to Speakes, and one report said he was looking drawn, O'Leary said "I think he looks super. He moves right along. He doesn't favor his left side.'

It was Reagan's left lung that was wounded in an assassination attempt March 30.

"We're looking to the weekend, Saturday or Sunday," for the president's discharge from the hospital, said O'Leary, the hospital's spokesman during the president's stay there.

Missouri pays tribute to Bradley

MOBERLY, Mo. - Flags were ordered flown at half staff Thursday on government buildings across Missouri in final tribute to native son, Gen. Omar Bradley, the last of America's five-star generals.

Bradley died Wednesday night in New York City at the age of 88. Gov. Christopher Bond joined mayors of Higbee, where Bradley was born, and nearby Moberly, where he was reared, in issuing statements honoring the general.

Bond ordered flags flown at half staff on government buildings and mayors Donald Schaffer of Moberly and Carey Bankhead asked the same of city officials and townspeople. The mayors also asked churches to hold special remembrances this weekend.

Bond said he joined all Americans in "mourning one of our nation's great leaders."

Jury indicts man for death threat

NEW HAVEN, Conn. - Edward Richardson was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on two counts of threatening to kill or hurt President Reagan.

Richardson, 22, of Drexel Hill, Pa., was arrested Tuesday in Manhattan and is being held in New York in lieui of $500,000 bond.

U.S. Atty. Richard Blumenthal, who announced the indictments, said investigators have found no connection between Richardson and John Hinckley, Jr. who is charged with the March 30 shooting of President Reagan in Washington.

Both counts of the indictment against Richardson involve statements he allegedly made in notes left in a New Haven hotel or sent to Yale student Jodie Foster, the teen-age actress.

Richardson was arrested in New York's Port Authority where he was taken from a bus bound for Phildelphia. At the time, Richardson was carrying a .32 caliber revolver.

Blumenthal said Richardson will undergo a psychiatric exam to determine his competence to stand trial.

Senate closes down open meetings bill

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate killed a bill Thursday which would have relaxed some provisions of the state's Open Meetings Act. It chief critic said it would have punched more holes in it "than a piece of swiss cheese."

On an 18-21 vote, the Senate rejected the bill, which had passed the House. It is now dead for the 1981 session.

Other bills approved during a midday session would permit operation of a private liquor club at the Mid-Continent Airport in Wichita and change state regulations on use of physical punishment on children in boarding homes.

The open meeting bill was originally introduced to provide an exemption in the law to permit school board negotiating teams to hold closed meetings concerning teacher contracts.

It would have permitted members of public bodies to meet informally and privately to discuss business without violating the law. as long as not enough members were present to constitute a quorum.

Under current law, members of public bodies are permitted to meet privately only if there are fewer members present than would constitute a majority of a quorum.

Under the bill, up to four members of a nine-member body could have met without violating the law.

The bill also would have amended the law to add discussion of sale of property to the list of things public bodies are allowed to meet in executive session to discuss.

House's roadblock spurs discord

TOPEKA - The Kansas Legislature neared first adjournment late Thursday, with disagreements between the House and Senate over restoration of the Governmental Ethics Commission and funding for education delaying its nearly three-week recess.

The House threw up an unexpected roadblock when it balked at approving a conference committee report on one of the major appropriations bills of the 1981 session.

The Senate spent much of the afternoon debating a bill designed to restructure the Ethics Commission as a "Public Disclosure Commission" and took up time for debate and a vote on a new death penalty bill-even though Gov. John Carlin has made it clear he will veto any and all capital punishment bills.

However, leaders still predicted the Legislature would shut down by Thursday night, taking its 19-day recess before returning for its traditional "veto session."

Alternatives exist

Publicly, local military officials have suffocated rumors that Fort Riley is seeking an additional 30,000 acres of land for training purposes.

But officials in Washington have stated the military post is in need of the additional space and is working to obtain it.

Mere mention of such a move causes an uproar with local farmers and other residents who fear further "invasion" by a division of troops which already appear to be at the back door.

Certainly, there are alternatives.

There are many areas in the United States where the troops could be sent for temporary training. For example, on numerous occassions Fort Riley troops are sent to Fort Irwin, Calif. for training where an entire desert is available for maneuvers. Expensive it is, but it provides the extra land and exposes troops to a different training environment.

While the issue is being reviewed, the public must be careful not to blame the soldier on the street in Aggieville or the officer who lives next door. At the same time, Fort Riley and the Department of the Army should seriously consider alternatives to acquiring the additional 30,000 acres.

Cooperate first

I'd like to congratulate University Facilities for their efforts to rescue our lawns from the rampaging hordes of Frisbee players and other deviants-ball tossers, sitters down and anyone else who might be enjoying themselves. I have to admit I probably fall into the category of abuser rather than user. Sometimes while overcome with a Frisbee frenzy I jump and land with quite a bit of force on those delicate blades. I never really stopped to consider the damage I'm doing directly as well as the long-term effects of erosion and compaction.

Now, however, I see that it was presumptuous of me to assume that being enrolled at K-State entitled me to frolic on the lawns. I've tried playing on the intramural fields, but lately they've been otherwise occupied with softball games. After the third time I got hit on the head by a long ball to left field, I decided to move on, and the the empty lawns around campus seemed like viable alternatives. Reserving fields on K-State grounds is a little more complicated than filling out a form and waiting a couple hours. affiliated K-State organizations can reserve these facilities.

Why not try a cooperative effort first, instead of a general ban on using lawns? Working together with those who, in part, provide your salaries seems better to me than issuing proclamations restricting our free time.

Walking in the fast lane

It's an easy game, one most people play every day. In fact, most people have playing since they were little babies.

I refer to the game of walking, putting one foot in front of the other, to propel oneself forward. Actually, one could also propel oneself backward, but that brings about the problem of backing into things, a diverse subject that I will not dare attempt analyzing.

What I would like to discuss is the complex ritual of walking across campus. There are rules that we all seem to observe, often without even noticing it.

The first rule is simple: Stay on I've noticed many times that this is not as easy as it might seem. Also, those who break this rule, inevitably do so with an armload of books that proceed to fly in many directions (into the mud if there is any around). I often think of walking as similar to the game of driving a car. I maneuver in and out of lanes, passing slow-moving vehicles (persons) as I go. To pass people, I shift into high geer and accelerate. My bumper however does not have turn signals so I have on occasion collided or caused another to swerve off the sidewalk.

WITH THIS ANALOGY, comes another rule: sudden braking is expressly forbidden. You will find that if you do suddenly halt progress, you will more than likely be rear-ended. This could cause embarrassment to say the least, a major pile-up to say the

The third rule of the game involves partners. If you are walking with someone, you must do something to indicate that you are indeed together. This could be as simple as talking to one another, or as enjoyable as holding hands or walking arm-in-

If you are walking alone, your job is simple. Never appear as though you are walking with someone. This is usually achieved by accelerating when you get beside another player or walking so fast that no one could possibly keep up with you.

The more interesting aspects in the game of walking are the social rather than the physical aspects. What do you do when you see a friend up ahead about 200 feet, walking towards you? Do you scream to him, or do you tend to pretend you don't see your friend until you are within a "respectable" distance before acknowleging his existence. Most people will wait.

THIS SAME GAME can also be played when spotting someone who you really don't want to see, like the person you just had a fight with, or the instructor whose class you skipped. Rather than diving into the bushes to avoid a confrontation, most people suddenly become interested in scenery and pretend they are oblivious to all around them. This permits them to say, "I'm sorry, I didn't see you," with a semi-clear conscience.

complicated more predicament encountered in playing the game of walking, is what to do when you see a friend, or acquaintance walking up ahead of you, going the same direction. Of course, if you are already walking with someone, this is not a problem, you have a walking partner and it would be a violation of another rule to run away from this person (with no explanation) to be partners with another.

In this situation people tend to do one of two things: they will run to catch up, or slow down their pace. Accelerating is simple but might draw too much attention, so, many seem to opt for slowing down. It seems strange to slow down, to essentially back off from what should be a friendly encounter, but rules are rules and for some sociological reason we all seem to play the game.

OCCASIONALLY, RULES can come in handy. For instance, most people will acknowlege someone they know when passing them on campus (unless under the abovementioned circumstances). This often causes some interesting, half-finished conversations in passing. It also protects people like me who don't wear their glasses on campus and thus don't always recognize people, mistaking them for others.

I can't count the number of times I've greeted someone with an enthusiastic hello, only to discover on closer inspection that it is not who I thought it was. I've noticed though that the rules of the game do not allow me to let it go. I find myself in unconscious compliance with the rules as I pretend that I am waving to the person behind the mistaken one, and perhaps even that they are waving back.

The rules governing the games people play are too numerous to list further. Besides, I need to go for a walk across the campus game board and play another game. I think it's called being a

Continue support

Editor,

On Tuesday, March 23, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and Omega Psi Phi fraternity launched a month-long campaign concerning the unsolved murders of black children in Atlanta.

We set a financial goal of $1,000 be reached through unrestricted contributions. A petition requiring 1,000 signatures also was drafted. The petition calls for continued federal intervention in the investigation through federal monetary increased and resources mobilization of federal law enforcers. The petition is addressed to President Reagan and contributions toward the Atlanta Crisis Fund will be sent to the Atlanta Life Development Center where professional counseling is being provided to the families of the slain victims.

As the result of first four days of the project, the petition has more than 600 signatures and the crisis fund totals $737.86. We appreciate the support we have received thus far. Yet, as stated this project is a month-long commitment.

When the project was initiated there were 20 black children murdered and 2 reported missing. Currently, those statistics have climbed to 22 murdered and three reported missing. One of the reported missing was found slain a week ago, yet two more were added to the list of those missing.

The green ribbons, symbolizing life, are reminders of the unsolved murders. If you have ribbons, we ask that you continue to wear them. Ribbons also will be displayed on some of the trees on campus. we ask that you be respective of this project and not tamper with nore remove them from the trees.

On April 30th a formal ceremony which may include a campus-wide demonstration will be held. In the meantime, keep a watchful eye on further activities planned for the immediate future.

Thank you K-State and Manhattan for your encouraging support and may God bless.

Professors discuss proposed inter-college major

Collegian Reporter

A proposal to combine two recreationoriented programs at K-State is under consideration by the deans of the colleges involved, but the professors who initiated the proposal warn that the merger must take place soon.

One of the programs is the recreation curriculum in the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation (HPER). The other is the park and recreation areas management option of the natural resource management curriculum in the Department of Forestry.

The University can't afford to wait much longer before acting on the recreation reorganization, Ben Mahaffey, associate professor of forestry, said.

"I think it's imminent, but I don't want to wait until it's forced upon us by the

If it doesn't happen... we're not going to have a good program professional association or...the students (who) can't get jobs because they're not out of an accredited school," Mahaffey said. Within five to 10 years, this will be the situation, he said.

"If it doesn't happen...we're not going to have a good program," Donald Lindley, associate professor of HPER, said.

IF THE PROGRAMS were combined, the resulting curriculum would be eligible for accreditation by the National Parks and Recreation Association, Mahaffey said.

"The recreation curriculum and our option (park and recreation management), neither one, because of a lack of resources and faculty, could ever become accredited," he said. "But if you put them together, they could be accredited."

However, not all faculty members believe reorganizaton is necessary for accreditation.

"My own professional feeling is that the park and recreation management program should evolve and grow so that it could be accredited by itself," Thomas Warner, assistant professor of forestry, said.

ALTHOUGH MAHAFFEY said the reorganization is necessary for a strong recreation program, others say they think a reorganization is not feasible at this time because of a lack of money and faculty

"How can you create a department with only four faculty members? That's what they're proposing to do," Warner said. "Even if it could be established, those four faculty members would have to have a proven record of being able to work within a department."

The reorganizaton is also "not realistic" because there are "virtually no dollars" available for a new department, Warner

William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, agreed a lack of faculty members in HPER is one reason the reorganization will have to wait.

There will be a recreation reorganization, Stamey said, "but I can't say when and I can't say what it will entail."

IN 1978, Mahaffey and Lindley wrote a prospectus outlining the advantages and disadvantages of the reorganization, based on the requirements for accreditation.

Those considering the proposal include Stamey; John Dunbar, dean of agriculture; David Mugler, associate to the dean of agriculture; and Provost Owen Koeppe.

Stamey said he and Koeppe treated the recreation program reorganization as a "major topic of discussion" at a recent meeting. They discussed how they could organize the recreation department to be "the best in the state."

The process for reorganizing any academic program begins with a consultation between the deans and all parties involved to decide departmental needs, such as leadership structure, said William Carpenter, associate dean of arts and sciences. In this case, those involved would include professors and students in both recreation options, he said.

A proposal by the deans would then be sent to the provost and the president, Carpenter said. If they approve the proposal, they would make a recommendation to the Board of Regents, he said.

AT THIS TIME, park and recreation students are completing questionnaires concerning their opinions about the proposed change, Mahaffey said. One questionnaire was developed and circulated by five students in the forestry department.

It was sent to all students in the park and recreaton option and the graduates from the past two years in this option. The graduates were contacted because they're "out in the job world" and know if the reorganization would make a difference in preparing the students for careers, Kelley Collins, senior in natural resource management, said.

The results of the survey are not available, because only 60 percent of those contacted have returned the questionnaires, Annette Norris, senior in natural resource management, said.

Members of clubs in HPER and the Department of Forestry are also discussing the issue.

The Recreation Club has also developed a survey that will be filled out by recreation students and recent graduates. The survey and a fact sheet, based on the results of Mahaffey and Lindley's report, was sent out late this week, said David Winter, president of the Recreation Club and junior in HPER.

After the results of the survey are gathered, Winter said they will be presented to Mahaffey and the officers of the Natural Resource Management Club.

ALTHOUGH MAHAFFEY said he thinks the students will be in favor of the change, he described the deans' attitudes as "indifferent." He also said he hasn't seen any action on the part of the provost.

Dunbar said he is "very concerned that every unit of our organization serve a function and serve the people in Kansas."

"We have a Natural Resource Management Committee and there is no desire on their part that we can detect to reorganize the parks and recreation option," he said.

Stamey also said he is concerned about the proposal.

"I've been puzzling and fussing over this for three or four years," he said. "He (Mahaffey) may have interpreted my failure to come up with some great proposal as indifference, but I'm not indifferent at all."

STUDENTS ARE divided on the issue of reorganization and it is difficult to predict which position most are in favor with until results are in from the questionnaires.

"I think it would benefit both curriculums...just because we would be able to have more faculty," Randy Watson, senior in natural resource management, said.

"Most people I've talked to are really in favor of it because our department (recreation) is so large...It makes it really hard to get as much out of the program as we should and could," Winter said. "There are so many kids that get into recreation and find they want more than just recreation....

"The only problems I can see with it is where are we going to be put. Where are they going to house us?...That seems like a trivial problem to me," Winter said.

One student said she was opposed to the proposed change because the negative aspects of the change would outweigh the benefits.

"I'm against it," said Roxanne Beard, sophomore in natural resource management. "I don't think it would benefit at all. The so-called accreditation would be a minor benefit as compared to all the negative things."

MAHAFFEY GAVE reasons other than possible accreditation that a reorganization of the recreation department is necessary. One is that a reorganization would follow a current trend in the profession to merge recreation with park management.

"The management aspects in the field professionally...go together. We should be educating them together," he said.

Another reason Mahaffey gave for merging the two options was the "awkward" academic structure of the current

Senate passes death penalty bill

TOPEKA (AP) — In response to the attempted killing of President Reagan, the Kansas Senate passed and sent to the House Thursday a bill to restore the death penalty for pre-meditated murder committed with a firearm.

It was the second time the Senate passed a capital punishment measure this session.

The vote was 26-13—three more than the upper chamber mustered to pass an almost identical death sentence measure in early February which was later vetoed by Gov. John Carlin.

The bill, pushed by Republican Sens. Edward Reilly of Leavenworth and Edward Roitz of Pittsburg, would only apply to persons convicted of premeditated murder committed with a firearm. The earlier bill this session applied to first-degree murder, and murders committed in the commission of a rape or sodomy.

LEGISLATIVE ACTION on the bill came even though another veto is almost certain from Carlin, who has vetoed three death penalty bills since he took office.

"If this measure is passed," Reilly said.
"it would be loud and clear not to use a firearm."

He noted that the bill was prompted by the assassination attempt on Reagan, but added that about 60 percent of the killings in Kansas are committed with a gun.

Reagan survived, he said, "but the others who were murdered by firearms—Martin Luther King, President Kennedy, John Lennon and other distinguished d Americans—is the issue we have to address. How do we curtail and control the use of firearms?" Reilly asked.

The bill is identical to the proposal vetoed by Carlin early this session, except that it limits the application of a death sentence only to pre-meditated murder with a gun.

THAT PROMPTED some questioning by senators who suggested that the bill, as drafted, could violate equal protection clauses of the U.S. Constitution because not all classes of murder would be treated the ame.

"I can't support a bill which puts one life on a higher plane than another," said Sen. Elwaine Pomeroy (R-Topeka), who voted in favor of the last death penalty measure. "To me the victim is just as dead if they were knifed, if they were strangled, burned or if a firearm was used."

The death penalty issue appeared before the Senate a second time last week when Reilly failed in an attempt to amend the new capital punishment proposal into another measure during debate.

The bill calls for death by lethal injection. If that were declared unconstitutional, hanging would be a second method of execution, and electrocution would be a third alternative.

Kansas had the death penalty until the U.S. Supreme Court struck down all such state laws in 1972. The Legislature finally passed a bill to reimpose capital punishment in Kansas in 1979, and Carlin issued the first of his three vetoes of such proposals.

Robert Ludlum has done it again.
"The Bourne Identity," Ludlum's newest international thriller, is definitely up to the high quality of his previous novels.

Like his other novels, "The Bourne Identity" spent 40 weeks atop the New York Times bestseller lists, and was a Literary Guild monthly selection. And like his previous publications, Ludlum interweaves plot with subplots. Although the characters are real, none of them are exactly what they seem to be.

In "The Bourne Identity" an amnesiac is fished out of the Mediterranean, near death from a number of gunshot wounds. He is taken to an English physician who is practicing in a small town in southern France.

The doctor heals the injured man, but there are only a few clues to his identity. One of these clues is a small frame of microfilm which had been surgically implanted in the patient's thigh.

the number of a secret bank account in Zurich. In Switzerland, the initials prove to be those of Jason Bourne, and the account holds $4 million dollars.

Bourne claims the money, and becomes the target of a murderer, but it is not clear who is after him.

The woman who unwillingly helps Bourne escape from the first attempt on his life, is not quite the innocent bystander she appears. Everywhere Bourne turns, someone is waiting to kill him, and those who assist him.

The various subplots take the reader halfway around the world, from New York to the jungles of Southeast Asia. Although these subplots are complicated they are not difficult to follow.

Ludlum uses names off of the front pages of newspapers to populate his novel. The most prominent mentioned in this book is the fabled "Carlos," the international assassin and terrorist.

The story of Bourne's search for his identity is filled with uniquely interesting insights into the arcane worlds of international finance and intrigue, especially the workings of the Swiss banks.

directed by different people, he said. This has caused "in-house bickering" and jealously, he said. THE REASON Mahaffey and Lindley haven't been able to capture attention is that there is "political and economic" opposition to the change, Mahaffey said. Part of the opposition is because both the forestry department and HPER are involved. With the two in different colleges, the issue becomes complicated, Lindley said.

The restructuring would involve 130 students in HPER, 75 in forestry and four faculty members, Lindley said.

Another argument against reorganization is that if the recreation program leaves the forestry department, it will lose its involvement with natural resources, Mahaffey said.

"Some people think if we merge, we'll lose our natural resource base, especially if we leave...agriculture," he said.

Mahaffey said this won't happen if the new program were well-structured. He said natural resource management needs to "get to the other side of campus" and become involved with social sciences as well as with natural resources.

"The real challenge is with the people," he said. "We know how to manage the resources, but we have never learned to manage the people."

K-State's 28,000 miles, 287 tons of paper could circle the world

Collegian Reporter

Put the rest of the sizes, shapes and colors of paper used by K-State end to end and they will circle the world with some to

In addition to this 28,000 miles of paper, picture 48 six-ton elephants equal to 287

This is the amount of paper used by K-State in one semester.

It includes letterhead stationary and envelopes, hand-outs, brochures, computer paper, paper from copy centers, bulletins, newsprint and cardboard. It comes from several copy centers around campus, including the Data Processing Center, KSU Printing Service, individual college copy centers, Continuing Education and Extension Services.

THE FIGURES are approximations of the average amount of paper printed by these centers as cited by officials from each outlet. The comparative figures were obtained from the 1980 Information Please Almanac.

The largest printing outlet on campus is the KSU Printing Service. It's yearly output of 4,004,000 sheets of paper could stretch 826 miles, or from Kansas City to Pittsburg. It costs $24,024 to buy the paper used by the service. An additional 307,000 pounds of fine paper and 280,000 pounds of newsprint is printed by it each year. The newsprint costs $415 to $420 a ton, or $119,105 a year.

Sixteen million sheets of paper are printed a semester by Continuing Education. This would go 289 times around the moon. Each orbit would cost about $42.

Umberger Duplicating Center for Education averages 1,250,000 sheets of paper a month or 5,000,000 sheets a semester. This would stretch across Kansas twice.

THE ENGINEERING Experiment Station wouldn't go quite as far with their 1,250,000 sheets of paper. They would only cover 13,622 football fields.

The 1,080,000 sheets from the Data Processing Center would reach one and one fourth times as high as Niagra Falls.

Put $1,103,520 end to end and that is the length of the Union Copy Center's 505,600 sheets of paper.

The 1,700,000 sheets of paper from the Arts and Sciences Copy Center would cross Lake Michigan lengthwise.

The College of Education prints 1,500,000 sheets or 34 square miles of paper. This would cover Tuttle Creek Reservoir with nine square miles to spare. The cost: $7,500 a semester.

The 2,000 sheets of paper the Home Economics Center would reach into the sky one and one fourth times more than the World Trade Center.

IF THE 19,140 students attending K-State used an average of four notebooks a semester with 100 pages each, it would be 7,656,000 sheets of paper or 1,528 miles. That would run half-way down the Congo River in Africa.

The staggering figures for paper being used have jumped in the past few years simply because more is being used.

"The amount of paper we print," Jo Ann Messick, a duplicator operator for Continuing Education, said, "has doubled since I started working here three years ago."

'The amount of newsprint used has doubled in the last ten years," said Bill Brown, director of Student Publications. "We use 2,000 pounds of newsprint a day where we did use 1,000 pounds."

The amount of paper hasn't risen rapidly at Umberger Duplicating Center, but usage

"There hasn't been much increase in the amount of paper being used," Coloriss Lackey, duplication supervisor said, "but where most used to be single-sided, it is now both sides. I think people have realized it's expensive and there are trees being cut down for it, so they go double-sided now."

Most of the printing centers don't have trouble getting paper if they order far enough in advance, unless there is a strike in the paper mills.

"There's a problem just when there's a paper strike, so we order large amounts ahead of time," said Mary Kay Meehan, the supervisor at the Union Copy Center.

Brown also requisitions newsprint in advance for the Collegian. It must be ordered three months in advance, he said, in order to avoid running out of paper because of strikes or shortages.

WAR march to increase awareness of violent acts

Women will be marching through the streets of Manhattan at 6:30 Saturday night in an effort to increase community awareness of rape and other acts of violence against women.

The march, "Women Take Back the Night," is being sponsored by the Women Against Rape organization (WAR), a Manhattan support and awareness group formed in the fall of 1980. The march is part of a nationwide rape-awareness program.

WAR is trying to get television and radio coverage of the march in order to reach more people, said Pam Parker, public relations director for the march.

With an expected crowd of at least 100 women, the WAR members will lead the groups through the city with a police escort.

The march is scheduled to begin at City Park Pavilion where each participant in the march will receive a sheet of chants and songs to sing during the march. Following the march, WAR will be selling

Vigorous acting 'sparks' production

By WENDY SCHIAPPA Collegian Reviewer

"I have my own soul, my own spark of fire!" So cries the character of Henry Higgins in the play "My Fair Lady." In the K—State Players' production of the show, this weekend in McCain Auditorium, that spark of fire is Ida Quick as Eliza Doolittle.

The author of "My Fair Lady," Alan Lerner, once stated that "any musical should be approached with passion." Lerner agrees with Gabriel Pascal, the producer and director of the first adaptation of Shaw's "Pygmalion" in 1938, that "the heart may have its reasons of which the reason knows nothing; but reason all too often has no heart."

Quiek was the passion in the Players' production. Performing with a vigor for life and with the true spirit of Eliza Doolittle, Quick clearly showed the audience that the heart can be more important than reason. Quick played the cockney street urchin as easily as she portrayed an elite young woman at a ball. Her performance was both comic and moving. Her metamorphosis into a refined woman was believable.

An equally stunning performance was carried out by the scene designer, Carl Hinrichs. Stunning sets were brought out, not once or twice, but eight or nine times. Testimony to the impressiveness of the sets was spontaneous applause by the audience when they first saw Higgins study.

Kate Anderson's choreography was energetic, and indeed athletic. Anderson is a relative newcomer to the McCain stage, but she filled it with life and humor. The choreography for "Get Me to the Church on Time" brought the company together and created a sense of the cockney street life that was missing in the opening numbers.

This production of "My Fair Lady" had several exceptionally fine moments. A surprising delight was the lucid singing of Miles Phillips who portrayed Freddy Eynsford—Hill. His vocal performance of "On the Street Where You Live" is one point where it is a pleasure for the audience simply to listen sten. John Rahe and Linda Haynes are two well—known comic actors to K—States audiences. As Alfred Doolittle and Mrs. Higgins, they once again prove their talents. Rahe and Haynes can single-handedly build audience anticipation for their lines and not disappoint them with their delivery.

"My Fair Lady" is the first McCain production for Director Charlotte MacFarland. MacFarland, who has directed successfully several timeb, for the Manhattan Civic Theatre, has produced a mammoth show. Often her touch is evident in the production. MacFarland is especially capable of seeing humor in any situation. However, some slapstick was incongruous at times and was a distraction to the words and more importantly, to the feelings of the characters.

Good, evil conflict depicted in movie

By ROGER AESCHLIMAN Arts and Entertainment Editor

You want to see a good movie? Fine, go see "The Final Conflict." For value of sheer entertainment you can't beat it in "The Final Conflict" is the third and supposedly final movie of the "Omen" trilogy. However the concluding line of the show leaves little doubt that the producers are not yet closing the book on the profitable series.

Collegian review

Damien Thorn, portrayed by Sam Neil, has grown up and at 32 controls one of the worlds largest multinational corporations. He's a man of boyish goodlooks, he has a smile that would charm Archie Bunker and he is Satan's son.

Damien and his constant companion (a rather large dog, with big teeth) team up to dispose of the American ambassador to Britain. Damien is appointed to replace the ambassador. Now his plans are complete, he is in the land where Christ is to be reborn, as predicted in the Bible chapters of Revelations and Isaiah. He schemes to meet and destroy the child of Nazareth, before his own powers weaken to a point where he can no longer fight.

Christ is reborn under the tremendous glow of three stars that have collided. Damien organizes the followers of evil and sends them out with a mission-destroy every baby born between midnight and six in the morning of that night.

But wait, here come the Marines, in the form of seven zealot preists from some obsure monastery in Italy. They have managed to regroup the seven holy daggers, which alone can destroy Damien.

So the race is on. Will Damien and his followers kill all the baby boys in England? Will the priests kill Damien? What about the woman?

Oh yes, the woman. Kate Reynolds, played by Lisa Hurrow, is an enterprising, pretty talk-show host, who meets, dates, and loves Damien (biblically that is). Her main purpose in the movie is to add sex appeal and help with the surprise ending, which really isn't much of a surprise if you pay attention during the rest of the film.

All you people who have some interest in the Christian religion, go see it. The plot is more than loosely based on the prophecies of the Bible, and it could be reassuring to see good win out over evil.

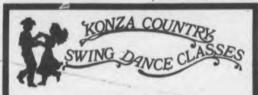

For movie buffs, who appreciate fine filming, this one is a winner. Panoramic shots of a fox hunt, a helicoptor flying over the ocean and Damien strolling over a picturesque bridge are very beautiful and shouldn't be missed. The vivid colors and special effects are incredible. In one scene Damien is up in his special prayer room surrounded by a eerie blue haze, check it out, it's really sharp.

Of course, for those of you who see movies for sex and violence, this one has got it for you. There are several explicit moments (like the ambassador's head exploding, and a baby appearing charcoalbroiled) but many times the violence is only implied, which is nice, because then you can make it as nasty or clean as you like.

If you like your sex and violence combined then there is even a scene for you. Damien introduces Kate to the "pure pleasure of pain." But as often happens, she wakes up a alone.

Perhaps best of all, Damien has a sense of humor. On one occasion, after being questioned about homosexuals he Being disturbed about "Last Tango..." is not unique. Everyone in the film is distrubed. This mood is a constructed, contaigous, atmosphere that Bertoloucci and the star, Marlon Brando, have unleashed on film. Needless to say, the effect is devastating.

If one is to accept the surface story as it is presented, then Brando's portrayal of Paul, and Marie Schnieder's as Jeanne, cast dark shadows on interpersonal relationships. Mixing Paul's shady motives with Jeanne's alternating innocent repulsion and savage indulging, not only questions sexual rules gather at K-State for festival participation

Drama students from 34 Kansas high schools will perform at K-State Saturday for the Kansas State Speech and Drama Festival.

Wendy Schiappa, graduate in speech and manager of the festival, said 300 to 400 students who have qualified through previous district meets are expected to participate in this years festival.

The drama students will perform in front of a panel of judges who will rate the students. Ratings of excellence, very good, average, and below average will be given by the judges. Those students with excellent ratings will be awarded medals and those receiving any other mark will receive a certificate of merit.

Schiappa said the students will not be in direct competition, but instead will be judged on the "intrinsic value" of the pieces they perform.

Events for the Kansas State High Schools Activities Association-sponsored festival include dramatic interpretation, informal speech, duet acting, improvised duet acting, one-act play, oration, extempore speech, poetry and prose.

All events are scheduled between 8-4 Saturday and will be in Denison and Eisenhower Halls. There is no admission charge.

but also questions human nature itself.

As Paul, a man whose wife has either been murdered or committed suicide, Brando delivers his best role since his early movies of the fifties. His occassional monologues are not exactly shining revelations of his character, but are brief glimpses into a black void.

Paul's wife apparently cheated on him, and after her death he feels that sex should be devoid of feeling. Complete reclusion from the outside world, and total anonymity from his partner become the important focus of his relationship with Jeanne. With these guidelines, the physical aspect of the duo gets brutal.

Schnieder is well fit for the role of Jeanne. She is the embodiment of the child with a woman's body. Her cherubic face and questioning of adult mores work perfectly as a balance to Brando's darker

International Week begins with art from 12 countries

Cultural exhibits, international food and a test of cultural knowledge will highlight International Week, April 13-18.

"Above All Nations is Humanity," will be the theme of the week, sponsored by the International Coordinating Council, which oversees all international student affairs, said Donna Davis, graduate student in education and employee at the International Student Center.

A cultural exhibit of artifacts, carvings and photographs from about 12 countries will be on display in the Union courtyard Monday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Several students from the countries will be in available to answer questions throughout the day, Davis said.

On Tuesday international food will be served for lunch in the Union Bluemont Room. The Union Stateroom will also serve food from a variety of countries Thursday

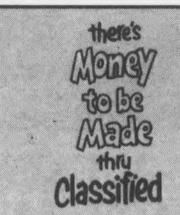

A quiz will be given at noon Wednesday in the Union Catskeller, consisting of questions about international politics, history and religions. Anyone wishing to participate in the quiz can register by calling the International Student Center or by signing up at a table that will be set up in the Union throughout the week.

The week's activities will end April 18 with a potluck dinner at 6:30 p.m. at Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park, Davis said.

The goal of the week is to allow American faculty members and students to become involved with international students, Davis said. There are currently about 800 international students enrolled at K-State. she said.

Interest in role-playing games rises; 'Dungeons and Dragons' most popular

By DEANNA HUTCHISON

Players are introduced to the game with these words in a rule book: "Welcome to the land of imagination. You are about to begin a journey into worlds where magic and monsters are the order of the day, where good and evil, law and chaos are forever at odds, where adventures and heroism are the meat and drink of all who would seek their fortunes in uncommon pursuits. This is the realm of Dungeons and Dungeons and Dragons is one of many role-playing games now on the market that has experienced a marked increase in popularity in Manhattan and across the nation. Others include Traveler, which takes its players into the future; Top Secret, with spy-like characters; Skull and Crossbones, involving pirates on the high seas; and Commando, which uses modern warfare as its theme.

"They're all the same. It's just that the settings are different," Chris Hurd, senior at Manhattan High School and a role-game player, said.

"I think it is definitely getting more popular in Manhattan. When I started about five years ago, there was only about 10 people in Manhattan who played. Now there's at least 100," said Bruce Sebree, graduate student in grain science and industry and instructor of a University For Man (UFM) Dungeon and Dragons class.

"We have all kinds of people in classengineering, architecture, one from Fort Riley, and some non-students too. Just about everybody plays," Sebree said."We started with about 30 people, and now have about 25 in three different groups.'

THE GROUPS meet every week, and play about three or four hours at each meeting.

"A whole campaign might last 20 to 50 game sessions. It can go as long as you want," Sebree said.

The game, and others like it, is also popular at Manhattan High School.

"I'd say there's close to about 25 people that play the role-playing games," Hurd said. "Dungeons and Dragons is the most popular."

"Some hard-core fanatics will play at any time they have available. Not many teachers are aware of it.

"Some people on the outside who are not familiar wth the game will speculate that the people who play it have an identity problem. But I think those who play it know that it's only a game," Hurd said.

ALTHOUGH HURD said he does not Collegian Reporter suffer from any identity problems, the game does have a drawback.

> "It starts to eat up time," he said. "It starts with weekends, then gradually eats up more time. It's a pretty addictive

> "But the only problem is time. There's never an identity problem. It's fun and that's all there is to it," Hurd said.

> A basic game set includes a map of the areas, legends, history, and background information concerning the situation to be faced by the players, a list of the characters and descriptions of their characteristics and abilities.

A referee, the dungeon master, controls the play during Dungeons and Dragons. He is in charge of setting up the dungeon, controlling the movement of non-player characters, rolling the dice and giving basic descriptions to the players of the situations they encounter.

AS THE CHARACTERS move around the board, they encounter various doors, secret tunnels, and obstacles. They must ask the dungeon master for details about how to deal with the items they encounter. In effect, a player must actually step inside his character and assume its characteristics, said Tim Moore, a member of the UFM Dungeon and Dragons class and Manhattan resident.

"The reason I really enjoy playing is that it's like you're creating a world. It's the adventurous aspect. I find it most enjoyable when the referee is very descriptive. It's like there's a real world out there that you're exploring," Moore said. "It's kind of fun discovering new things."

Two area bookstores carry Dungeon and Dragon games and accessories. Varney's Bookstore carries 57 different items related to the game, ranging from $3 to $15 said Gayle Paulseen, trade book buyer at Varney's.

"They keep releasing new things monthly, so they keep coming up with different things," Paulseen said.

She estimated that Varney's sells $200 a month in games and accessories.

THE BOOK NOOK carries between 200 and 250 game paraphernalia, said Lona Downing, owner and manager.

"We carry all the basic games, basic books, modules and dice," Downing said. "I would say that on they average we sell aout $1,000 a month—as a rough guess."

Clerks in both stores said there is really no "certain type" of customer who buys the

"I'd say that it's all ages from the junior high kids on up," Downing said. "A lot of their fathers get into it when they buy things for their kids."

"I think it's pretty diverse. We get a lot of high school kids, a lot of Fort Riley and a lot of college kids, too," Steve Peifer, textbook manager at Varney's, said.

War creates young victims

Children fight against malnutrition

ZARAGOZA, El Salvador (AP) - Their bellies are bloated by malnutrition and parasites, arms and legs shrunken

Some suffer from shell-shock and war nerves. They may cringe from adults and awaken crying in the night, dreaming of horrors they cannot relate.

Some wet the bed, and vomit when they try to eat. Some grope with tiny fingers for any grownup, calling incessantly for "Mama."

They are the worst of the child victims of El Salvador's savage little civil war, part of the human fallout in a conflict that claimed 13,000 lives last year.

NO ONE KNOWS for sure how many children have been orphaned or abandoned, but there is universal agreement many are suffering.

The Roman Catholic Church is caring for 1,000 children and priests say there could be 10,000 that need help.

Justice Minister Mario Antonio Solano said in an interview in San Salvador, the capital, the government is caring for 1,100 children in three centers and helping others. He estimated that 50,000 children 12 years and under have been displaced by the fighting between Marxist-led guerillas and the forces of the U.S.-supported civilianmilitary government.

The church and the government run separate refugee camps. Officials at both said the worst child cases probably exist in areas of conflict in the northern part of the country.

IT IS A loose rule of thumb here that church refugee camps house antigovernment refugees while governmentsponsored camps and the Red Cross house government sympathizers.

The church's Legal Aid Committee, an organization accused by the government and conservative churchmen of aiding leftists, claims security forces and their paramilitary allies have killed 237 children. The committee was set up within the San Salvador archdiocese to give poor people legal assistance and to keep track of human rights violations.

'Many of these kids are in bad shape when we get them. Some have been wandering in the mountains for days. They're like little zombies," said the Rev. Ken Myer, a Catholic priest from Lorain, Ohio, who opened a children's home last September in this village 20 miles south of the housed at other church facilities as soon as

Myer will not accept any children over age 13. He said older children might be accused of becoming politicized or even being combatants.

The 39-year-old priest said most displaced children suffer malnutrition, parasites and skin diseases. Some, like 18-month-old Arnoldo, have suffered irreparable brain damage because of malnutrition.

ARNOLDO CANNOT walk, talk or even crawl. The flesh just covers the bones of his arms and legs. Placed on the floor, he can barely move his head.

Mercedes Castro, a 13-year-old moppet with eyes like dark, shiny buttons, has been given charge of Arnoldo. She rocked him in a hammock while the priest was interviewed.

Mercedes is the oldest of six brothers and sisters at the center and her story is an example of what has happened to many children in El Salvador, plagued by terrorists from both quarters.

"We don't know who they were," she said. "They came at night when we were asleep. They took mommy and daddy away and we never saw them again."

Mercedes said that she and her brothers and sisters, ranging down to age 3, lived alone in their parents' house in San Francisco in Chalatenango Province for seven months.

SHE SAID they survived on handouts from neighbors until December when they were picked up by two Catholic nuns and brought to the center.

The two nuns were Ita Ford and Maura Clarke, slain along with another nun and a church worker later that month. There is evidence the four, all from the United States, were killed by Salvadoran security forces, but there have been no arrests.

The president of El Salvador's pro-Children Committee, Roberto Celis, said, "things were not good here for the children before the war. Now, many have been terribly traumatized. I fear we are creating another generation where resentment, terrorism and aggression will be major characteristics."

Celis said the 250-member volunteer organization is trying to make Salvadorans aware of the plight of the nation's young. He also said the committee is working to ease adoption laws.

SISTER CLEMENTINA CASTRO, a Catholic nun who runs the government's Hogar del Nino Children's Home in San Salvador, said courts already are more flexible in declaring abandoned children eligible for adoption.

"We have 501 children here. Perhaps 100 could be adopted now," said the nun, a member of the Sisters of Charity. The order runs the home for the government.

Sister Clementina showed a journalist through the home, pausing to wipe noses, button shirts and give one caress after another.

She was bitten on the finger by a little boy in a wheelchair. The nun said the boy had irreversible brain damage caused by "Grade 3 Malnutrition."

"The situation of the children is worsening," she added. "So many fathers are getting killed."

LAST YEAR, 42 children were adopted out of the center and 20 are to be adopted shortly. She said most of those adopted go to homes in the United States and Europe.

Shuttle to chart virgin territory; planners ready craft for liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — An explosion on the launch pad. A wrong-way rocket. The failure of an engine, or two. An embarassing U-turn to the Cape. Forced landings in Spain or Okinawa or Hawaii.

Page 34 of the spage agency's press book is entitled, simply, "If Things Don't Go Right—Contingencies."

Space people have put as much thought into planning what to do if things go wrong with Friday's launch of the first space shuttle as they have if things go right.

The word for ending the flight in varying degrees of hurry is "abort."

THE MERCURY, Gemini and Apollo space capsules all were mounted beneath escape rockets to lift astronauts out of danger if there was a problem with the volatile fuels below. There is no such rocket on the shuttle.

For the astronauts, one rather primitive means of launch pad escape remains: a basket that slides down from near the cabin to the ground into a bunker or a waiting armored personnel carrier. The astronauts also have standard ejection seats used in high altitude reconaissance planes. There's a question if they'd be much help, since the pilots would be near the fireball of an explosion.

John Young and Robert Crippen can use ejection seats up to 100,000 feet. Mission planners say they would eject in the event of "loss of control or impending catastrophic failure," or loss of any two of the three main engines.

THE SHUTTLE is an untried space craft. In earlier space programs, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration sent up unmanned vehicles on test flights designed to uncover disastrous flaws. The shuttle—which lands on a runway like a glider-was deemed too complicated for that.

Thus, the Columbia charts virgin territory and NASA officials pray that it's all-new power systems do not meet the fate of early unmanned rockets which exploded off the launch pad, or went haywire and had to be detonated in flight by remote control.

NASA and the astronauts are confident, but painstaking detail has been devoted to "contingencies."

For the first 4½ minutes of flight, Young and Crippen have the options of making a U-turn and returning to the long, 15,000-foot runway at Kennedy Space Center on the Cape. The vehicle would drop its boosters and use its two remaining engines to do the about-face then glide to a landing.

If there is power, but not much, Columbia could make a cross-Atlantic beeline for the U.S. Navy base at Rota, Spain.

Dreams of success recruit Navy pilots

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — A young man in Tampa couldn't see being a waiter the rest of his life. A bank clerk figured he'd rather move at 600 mph than stay grounded behind an adding machine.

The Navy, short on combat pilots but long on the romance of flying, agreed with them both.

In an era of declining recruitment and chronic personnel shortages in all U.S. armed forces, the Navy has come up with a program that would make P.T. Barnum proud.

After watching a dozen screaming jets cross paths above them, then talking to the men who fly the sleek machines and the admiral for whom they fly, the waiter and the bank clerk couldn't resist. Within a few weeks, both were well on their way to being admitted to flight school.

THEY ARE MEMBERS of a new recruiting target: college graduates who are less than happy with their lot in life. From accountants to school teachers to moonlighting cabbies, the Navy brass think there's a high-flying Walter Mitty in nearly Earlier this year in Atlanta and Tampa, the Navy staged spectacular demonstrations of its air power for more than 600 prospective flight school candidates. The prospects included men and women, although the Navy makes clear it is primarily after men because of the ban on combat roles for women. The Navy currently has 39 female pilots.

"Right now I'm a waiter," Chip Toland told recruiters in Tampa. "But that's not quite the job I'm looking for."

Robert Medsger, the bank clerk, attended the Florida demonstration to "look into another opportunity."

FRIDAY IS Dallas' turn. Navy officials say Dallas was chosen for the third and final "Naval Aviation Career Day" in part because a large number of furloughed commercial airline pilots live in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

But organizers of the two-day event at the Naval Air Station in Grand Prairie also expect several hundred prospective pilots who are more accustomed to office swivel chairs than cockpits.

The Navy has few basic requirements for the program. Applicants must be under 29 and in good physical condition, hold a four-year degree from an accredited college or university and have good vision. Pilot candidates are required to have 20-20 or better vision without the use of corrective lenses. Candidates who need glasses or contact lenses to achieve 20-20 vision are still eligible for admission as prospective naval flight officers.

"It's not really open to the general public," said Navy recruiter Lt. George Farrar. "We're looking for people who want to fly as Navy aviators."

THE NAVY and Air Force have not been traditionally been hard-pressed for candidates for aviator programs. The promise of one day becoming a commercial airline pilot has lured recruits to the Navy's Pensacola, Fla. flight school for years, said Lt. Cmdr. Sam Vickers, a veteran Navy pilot now working as a recruiter.

But with the commercial airline industry in a tailspin and the Navy 1,500 pilots short of its authorized strength, other incentives are beginning to work in the Navy's favor.

Although the starting pay for a Navy ensign is only about $15,000 a year, a Navy pilot with four years' experience can expect to make $26,000 or more, Vickers said.

"That's a lot better increase that you could expect if you entered a training program at a major corporation. And $15,000-a-year is about where you'd start."

VICKERS OBTAINED a degree in marketing from North Texas State University 10 years ago and joined the Navy because he couldn't find a job in accounting that interested him.

"There are still a lot of people out there who want to learn how to fly," he said. "Statistically, we've always found the Dallas-Forth Worth area a good place to find them."

More than a dozen different Navy aircraft from as far away at Norfolk, Va., will fly in to Grand Prairie on Friday. Vice Admiral G.E.R. Kinnear II, commander of the Navy's Atlantic Air Forces, whose idea it was to use live flight demonstrations in recruiting, will be there, too.

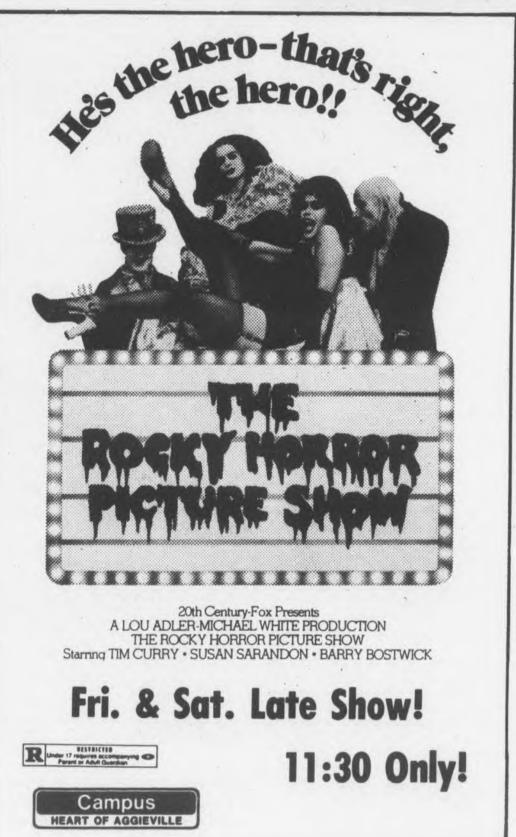

The Navy has always sought flight school

Airplanes and helicopters from Norfolk, Pensacola, Fla., and the Naval Air Station at Corpus Christi will make a low pass over the prospective new recruits, swoop down for a touch-and-go landing, theoopla will persuade a few desk-bound white collar workers to trade their brief cases in for an ensign's emblem,

It's really been a nightmare at the Texas Relays, where a Wildcat thrower has won only one gold medal in 20 years. It all changed last week, though, as senior Joe Bramlage fought off the gusting Texas wind and all the second place finishes over the years to bring home a gold. Bramlage uncorked a throw of 251-3, just off his personal best of 251-3 and his farthest throw so far this

WHAT'S SO UNUSUAL about all of this? The javelin is and has been a strong event for K-State for years. Nine Big 8 titles have been won by K-State javelin throwers in 20 years. But only one javelin thrower, Bill Floerke in 1964, in those same 20 yearbhas won in Texas.

"It was really terrible conditions to throw in because the wind was blowing from the left and at times was gusting up to 30 mph," Bramlage said. "I felt lucky to have such a good throw. Every meet that we've had so far this season, there's been a pretty strong wind and most of the time it's been a cross wind which is even worse, so we've (the javelin throwers) had some trouble figuring out the wind and getting good flight into the "Basically, though, on my 250-throw I got a good flight on it. The wind at Texas was the worst it's been all year, but the times that people got off good throws usually were the times when the wind had died down some what."

TRACK COACH Mike Ross, a threetime Big 8 champion in the javelin but never a winner at the Texas Relays, was especially happy to see Bramlage win, and forsees a possible triple crown for him later on.

"As a former javelin thrower who always came in second at Texas, few people enjoyed Joe's win more than I did," Ross said. "I've watched a lot of our javelin throwers just miss winning at Texas by so little; it's great to have finally won. We'd like to see Joe win at Kansas and Drake also, so he could win the triple crown and keep our string of javelin strings going.

Bramlage, a Marysville native, credits stiff competition from teammates Ray Hansen, a transfer student who is throwing unattached this season, Mark Perbeck, who is red-shirted, Darren Murphy, the 6A state high school javelin champion last year, and freshman Donnie McKinnis as a big key for throwing well so far this year.

"It's good to have somebody on your own team push you and keep you going," Bramlage said. "Ray Hansen has been a big influence on me so far this season. He came here as a transfer student and has really been throwing great. When we're working out, everybody helps each other out such as spotting something that someone is doing wrong.

Little things like that are important."

BRAMLAGE SAYS THIS year's field team is the most talented he's seen since he has been here.

"I think we have just about the top field team in the Big 8 this year,' Bramlage said. "So far we've qualified one person in at least every event in the field (qualify for the NCAA championship in June), except for the high jump, and I don't think we've ever done that before. There's a good chance that we could sweep all the field events at the Big 8 outdoor. Like I said, though, that's assuming no one gets hurt and everyone peaks by the time the Big 8 meet comes around.'

Bramlage, the defending Big 8 champion in the javelin, thinks K-State has a good shot at dethroning Kansas to win the Big 8 outdoor.

"The Big 8 meet has always been a meet where a team that hasn't really been that strong has a good performance and finishes real high," Bramlage said. "Obviously KU has been the dominating team for a long time, but the way things have been going-KU struggling somewhat and with us the way we're going-if anybody is going to put the push on KU for the title, it's going to be us."

Dream to go pro a possible reality for 'Cats' Triplett

By RON BROWN Collegian Reporter

In a short time-June to be exactanother K-State baseball player will have the chance to join the professional ranks.

Antonio Triplett, a junior shortstop hitting .348 going into the Oklahoma doubleheader, will be eligible for baseball's June amateur draft.

He has no doubt baseball is what he wants to do if the time is right.

"That's my dream, to turn pro," Triplett said. "If I get a pretty good shot I might go pro."

That shot could come soon. He has already been approached by scouts from the Texas Rangers and the St. Louis Cardinals. The Cardinals saw him when he attended Beaumont High School.

The Texas scout talked to Triplett concerning their needs. "He said they were looking for a shortstop with good range, a good arm and good speed," he said. "I told him that I love the sport and I'd like to play pro ball."

AT K-STATE, Triplett is concentrating on baseball because he figures it is his best chance to become a pro. This spring, in addition to the high batting average, he is leading the team in hits (46), runs scored (43), triples (6) and stolen bases (15). He is tied for the club lead in home runs (3) and runs batted in (32).

The fact he does well offensively is no surprise. At Johnson County Community College, Triplett hit .444 as a freshman and .365 as a sophomore.

"I know I can hit," Triplett said. "I just have to make contact and the hits are going to come."

Defensivley, Triplett also helps to prevent hits with good range. He is third on the club with 148 chances behind only first baseman Joe Goedert and catcher Dan Linden. The breakdown is 52 putouts, 81 assists and 15 errors. His fielding percentage is .899.

"My defense isn't as sharp as it was in the fall," Triplett said. "I've got a whole lot of chances so far, more than I ever have."

Women's tennis team falters at Big 8 meet

By CARI CAVASSA Collegian Reporter

The K-State women's tennis team didn't go to Oklahoma City for the Big 8 Championships Thursday expecting everything to come up roses, but it wasn't expecting only thorns, either.

However, when the majority of K-State's players were pitted against top-notch athletes in the first round, luck is all that can be hoped for.

And through luck, K-State may have two players place higher than sixth in the Big 8.

No. 5 singles player Kris Breisch defeated Kim Fuller of Iowa State 5-7, 6-0, 6-0; and No. 6 singles Sherry Nelson chalked up a victory after another player defaulted.

"Two of our players will finish sixth or fifth—we've never had a player finish even sixth in Big 8 competition," coach David Hacker said

"It's a small consolation, but when you're drowning you reach for small straws," he added. "There's some darned good tennis here."

THE REST OF the 'Cats experienced only defeat.

Four of the nine matches played Thursday put K-State against the tournament's

Royals, Orioles to open season

The Kansas City Royals open their 14th year of baseball today, opposing the Baltimore Orioles in Baltimore's Memorial Stadium starting at 1 p.m. CST.

Larry Gura, 18-10 last year, will oppose last year's Cy Young Award winner, Steve Stone, 25-12, on the pitching mound.

The Royals, American League champions last year, will leadoff with Willie Wilson in center field (.326 average last season), followed by designated hitter Hal McRae (.297), third baseman George Brett (.390), first baseman Willie Aikens (.278), left fielder Amos Otis (.251), right fielder Clint Hurdle (.294), catcher John Wathan (.305), shortstop U.L. Washington (.273) and second baseman Frank White (.264).

For example, No. 3 singles Candie Gwin played the top seed in the first round, as did
No. 4 Kathy Manning.

Doubles pitted K-State's No. 1 team— Tamie Peugh and Brenda Bennett—against Oklahoma State, the top-seed. The same was true with K-State's No. 3 doubles of Breisch and Nelson.

In No. 1 singles, Peugh was beaten by Helen Wilson of Missouri 6-2, 6-0. She also lost in the consolation bracket to Sheri Schrufer of KU 6-0, 6-4. No. 2 singles Brenda Bennett lost to Shannon Riede of Colorado 6-1, 6-0; Bennett was defeated in the consolation bracket by Missouri's Greta Froneberger 6-0, 6-3.

ANN NEUBERGER of Colorado defeated K-State's No. 3 singles Candie Gwin 6-0, 6-1. Gwin lost the consolation match against Mary Koval of MU 6-3, 6-0. No. 4 singles Kathy Manning was beaten by Jill Patterson of Colorado 6-1, 6-0, and experienced defeat in the consolation match 6-2, 6-2 against Nebraska's Sue Moore.

In doubles action only the first round was played. K-State will be playing consolation rounds today.

Peugh and Bennett lost to Reide and Patterson of CU 6-1, 6-0; the No. 2 team of Gwin and Manning was defeated by MU's Koval and Backstrom 6-2, 6-0. No. 3, Breisch and Nelson were beaten by Mary Jewett and Sue Mowery of Oklahoma State 6-0, 6-0.

AS PREDICTED BY the coaches' poll, Oklahoma State finished the day looking like a winner by advancing five players into finals matches. Colorado, picked to finish second, will advance four players to the finals and defending champion Oklahoma will send three.

In the No. 1 singles, OSU's Debbi Huitt will play 1980 singles champ Kathleen Cummings of Oklahoma. No. 2 singles Riede will take on Stefanie Flory, one of Oklahoma's defending champions. Suzie Brennan of OU faces Sue Mowery in No. 3 singles.

Oklahoma State and Colorado will have all three doubles teams in semifinals today.

K-State and KU will battle for seventh place as both schools experienced bad days.

"If we beat KU in two matches, we have a pretty good chance of bumping them into eight place—our normal spot," Hacker said.

Action continues today with Breisch playing No. 5 singles and Nelson playing No. 6 singles.

Crippled Kings to host Phoenix in playoff game

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Hoping to overcome their "home court disadvantage," the crippled, upset-happy Kansas City Kings host the Phoenix Suns Friday night in the National Basketball Association Western Conference semifinals.

The series shifts to Kansas City following an almost unbelievable 88-83 Kings victory Wednesday night in Phoenix that squared the best-of-seven series at one game apiece.

The Kings won their first playoff game in Arizona in three years without their best two players, guards Phil Ford and Otis Birdsong, and after suffering a 22-point wipeout the night before.

Counting their best-of-three miniseries with Portland, the Kings now have three playoff victories to their credit, and all three have been on the road.

Without Ford, Friday night's game figures to be another tortoise-and-the-hare affair, with 6-7 small forward Scott Wedman moving to guard, 6-6 power forward Reggie King moving to small forward, 6-10 reserve center Leon Douglas moving to power forward, and 33-year-old 6-10 Sam Lacey remaining at center. Guard Ernie Grunfeld, 6-6, has played heroically at times in place of Ford.

"I don't think we'll have another poor shooting night," said MacLeod. And Fitzsimmons agreed.

Ex-'Cat baseball star plants roots in Topeka

Collegian Reporter Another former K-State sports personality has found a home in the athletic department at Washburn University of

Steve Anson

Steve Anson, a four-year member of the K-State baseball team from 1973-1976, has joined another K-Stater, head basketball coach Bob Chipman, as an Ichabod. Anson, who is Chipman's assistant, is also the head baseball coach at Washburn.

Since arriving on the Ichabod campus in 1979, Anson has been assigned the task of building Washburn into an NAIA District 10 baseball power.

Anson's Ichabod squad got off to a shaky start his first season there, going only 10-20. But he said his young ball club lost eight games by one run.

The Ichabods are 7-5 this season.

AS FOR ANSON'S background, he began his climb in the baseball world in Mishawaka, Ind.-his hometown which borders South Bend.

Like many other young athletes native to the basketball-crazy state, Anson was also a cager at Penn High School. However, Indiana wasn't enough for Anson as he decided to further his athletic career elsewhere.

Weekend sports

The K-State men's track team will take a full squad to Oklahoma Saturday to compete in the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman.

With the Kansas Relays next week, the meet Saturday is somewhat of a tuneup for the Wildcats, who have been performing well since the beginning of the outdoor season three weeks ago.

"The Jacobs meet is a fun meet," coach Mike Ross said. "Team scores will be kept, which gives a little more excitement. They score the meet every four or five years, when they think they can score well."

Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Missouri, Arkansas, North Texas State and a few smaller schools will be on hand for the

"The main fight for the team title will come from us, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State," Ross said. "Oklahoma and Oklahoma State have exceptional speed on the track."

Both triple jumper Vince Parrette and weightman Ray Bradley are still nursing hamstring pulls but both will be competing Saturday.

"Ray's getting a lot better since last week," Ross said. "He should come back real strong this weekend in the discus, while Vince still is coming back slowly. He's still pretty weak but hopefully he'll be strong for the KU Relays next week."

After being split up last weekend, the K-State women's track team will be united again as it travels to the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla., today and Saturday.

Last year the Wildcats came away with only two first-place finishes-from the mile relay team and Janice Stucky in the shot put.

However, this year coach Barry Anderson is hoping his team will make a better showing at the Invitational and qualify some athletes for the Drake Relays and Kansas Relays.

The Wildcats will have both Beets Kolarik and Ronda Bergren competing in the heptathalon while pentathlon competitor Kim Hagger will only participate in a few individual events. This manuever was designed to Hagger a

Two Wildcats who made good, promising showings last week were Deb Pihl and Wanda Trent. Trent captured the crown in the 400-meter dash at the Husker Invitational while Pihl finished sixth in the 1500-meter run at the Texas Relays.

Softball

Looking toward a victory to improve 24-14 overall. its 9-12 record, K-State's softball team will participate in the Washburn University Tournament today and Saturday in Topeka.

A five-team round-robin schedule will be played with the tournament champion being the squad with the most victories after the four games.

Coming away from two home wins against Missouri Western State Wednesday, the squad will play Marymount at 2 p.m. and Southwest Baptist College from Boliver, Mo. at 4 p.m. today.

"We've never played any of these teams before," coach Charlotte Michal said. "You never know what to expect, but we're hoping to pick up some wins down there.

Saturday at noon the 'Cats will compete with Washburn and play Benedictine at 2:00 p.m. In its last meeting with Benedictine at Emporia, K-State lost to the team by one run in the first game and downed it the second game 10-1.

"We're looking for a win on that one," Michal said.

Tennis

Losing its No. 3 singles player, Gary Hassenflu, to a lower back injury, the K-State men's tennis team will take on three Big 8 rivals shorthanded at the Kansas State Men's Invitational Tournament today, Saturday and Sunday.

"It really kills us-not only in the No. 3 singles but also in doubles," coach Steve Snodgrass said about the loss of the team's only undefeated player. "It's just bad timing."

K-State will host all matches at the Cottonwood Racquet Club, competing with Colorado at 2:00 p.m. today.

"CU has three guys back from last year who are pretty good," Snodgrass said. "They'll be strong, but I don't know how strong."

Oklahoma State and the University of Kansas will battle at 9:00 a.m. Saturday as K-State rivals KU at 2:00 p.m. According to Snodgrass, the squad has a good chance to play well against KU.

The Wildcats will take on top 10 power Okahoma State at 9:00 a.m. Sunday.

"They're very good," Snodgrass said. "We just hope to compete."

Snodgrass's line-up for the meet puts Jeff Henderson in the No. 1 singles position; Steve Webb will play No. 2; Matt Westfall takes Hassenflu's place in the No. 3 spot with Dan Forrester playing No. 4. Dave Krizman and Mike Goss will followup in the No. 5 and 6 positions.

"This is our big weekend," Snodgrass said, as all points earned during the tournament go toward final standings in the Big 8.

Football

Four of the area's top high school football coaches will highlight the program of K-State's annual two-day coaches' clinic here today and Saturday.

Frank Walton of Topeka West, John Dawkins of Wichita Southeast, John Kendall of Liberal and Jerry Culver of Rockhurst will join Wildcat coach Jim Dickey and his staff during the two-day program.

Registration will begin at noon today at the KSU Stadium complex.

Crew

Boats from the University of Nebraska, Oklahoma State, Kansas and K-State will be competing here Saturday as the K-State University Rowing Club will host the Big 8 Regatta.

Racing is set to begin on the southeast corner of Tuttle Creek Reservoir at 11 a.m. Depending on wind direction, races will be either along the east shore or next to the dam.

Men's and women's eights, fours and single boats will compete in varsity and novice classes.

Baseball

Playing away from home has not been easy for K-State's baseball team so far this spring.

The Wildcats take a 1-10 road record into conference doubleheaders at Oklahoma today and Saturday.

Despite that mark, K-State is only one game behind the Sooners in the league standings. OU is 4-4 in league play and 29-5 overall, while the 'Cats are 3-5 and

The Wildcats go into the doubleheader after winning three out of four last weekend from the Kansas Jayhawks while the Sooners took it on the chin three out of four times at Nebraska.

However, K-State pitching coach Bill Hickey knows that the Sooner attack is potent, featuring outfielder Frank Meraz, who sports a .375 average and leads the Big 8 with 12 home runs.

That is not the only worry of the Wildcats' hurlers. OU catcher John Russell has 10 round-trippers and Hickey said he can hit the ball out of any park. It also helps that the left field fence in Norman is only 270 feet from the

At second base, the Sooners have twoyear letterman Greg Carlton, who is hitting .413 this season.

On the mound for K-State will be the right-handed foursome of Mike Johnson (3-2, 5.06), Doug Able (1-3, 5.75), Mickey Fleeman (2-2, 6.94) and Louie Trujillo (2-1, 4.75).

Hickey is doubtful which day Able will pitch because the senior has had a sore throat this week. The day he doesn't pitch, Fleeman will take his place.

The pitchers will be backed by a K-State attack hitting .311. The Wildcats feature two hitters over .400.

Outfielder Glynn Perry and first baseman Joe Goedert lead the team, with Perry hitting .402 and Goedert hitting .400.

Behind them is Antonio Triplett batting .348. The junior shortstop is tied for first with six triples, second with 15 stolen bases and tied for third in hits (46) and runs scored (43).

Anson...

(Con inued from p.16) virtually every offensive category-except stolen bases. That last problem, however, was crucial enough to cost Anson a shot at the pros. "Evidently they (the scouts) didn't think

I had enough speed," he said. "I was very interested in it (a pro career). I expressed that by telling them."

ANSON SAID his showing in Big 8 play should have earned him a tryout somewhere.

Triplett

(Consinued from p.14)

DESPITE THE HIGH number of errors, Triplett said he is gradually making the transition from junior college to major college ball.

The biggest difference he has noticed is pitching. Junior college pitching was much more inconsistent, he said.

On the major college level, Triplett said he has to face guys throwing 85 mph consistently and not just once a year like in Triplett said he could have skipped going to junior college and come to K-State as a freshman, but the time wasn't right.

"I talked to coach (Dave) Baker when I was in high school," Triplett said. "He was all out of scholarships and I didn't have the money to come here. So he told me about Sonny (Maynard, the baseball coach) down at juco."

During his two years at JCCC, Triplett was a starter on the baseball team as well as a two-year starter as a forward on the basketball team.

However, basketball was out of the question since he is here on a baseball scholarship. He said his obligation is to Baker and baseball.

"I feel Big 8 ball is equal to Double A ball

(a minor league division)," he said. Since his playing days ended, Anson has looked toward the coaching profession. After graduation in December of 1976 with a B.S. in physical education, he began work on a M.S. in education from K-State, which he received in May 1978.

During that time, he served as a full-time assistant coach to Phil Wilson, who quit after the 1977 spring season.

Oklahoma faces investigation

FBI may uncover big scandal

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The power of the long-time kings of local government in Oklahoma, the county commissioners who reign unchallenged because they control the purse strings, is under attack in a statewide FBI investigation of alleged kickbacks on purchases of heavy equip-

Sources close to the recently disclosed two-year investigation say that scores of commissioners will be indicted by a federal grand jury later this year on charges of taking kickbacks and artificially inflating prices paid for construction equipment, lumber and other goods.

The investigation has already cracked the commissioners power base. Oklahoma

House Speaker Dan Draper says the Legislature should look at the situation to see whether new purchasing laws with stricter controls are needed-and whether each of the 77 counties still needs three commissioners.

SUCH A STATEMENT, if made prior to the FBI investigation and resultant reports of widespread corruption, would have produced a major outcry from commissioners and probably would have spelled big political trouble for Draper.

The 231 commissioners have been perhaps the most potent lobby in the state because they approve the county budgets, appoint many county officials and hire crews for county road work. In Oklahoma, where long distances separate most towns and mass transit is almost nonexistent, roads and highways are big political issues.

Legislators have always been careful not to cross commissioners because of their spending and patronage powers.

The commissioners, elected for four-year terms have salaries ranging from less than $10,000 in some lightly populated counties to as much as $31,000 in Oklahoma Conty. But they have almost $100 million in state taxes to spend each year on road construction, and, until the FBI investigation started, they had little supervision over how they

ONE SOURCE close to the investigation, who, like the others, insisted on anonymity, said it will produce "the biggest scandal in state history" because of the number of present and former commissioners who will be indicted-50 or more, he predicted.

Major state scandals in recent history were mild in comparison—a 1965 Supreme Court bribery case, in which two justices and one former justice were convicted, and the 1974 bribery—extortion trial of former Gov. David Hall, who was found guilty.

The Oklahoma investigation has spilled over into several northeastern Texas counties and sparked a grand jury investigation in Tyler, Texas.

"The investigation here started the one in Texas because of some individuals who were active in both states," one Oklahoma source said.

A KEY FIGURE in both the Oklahoma and Texas investigations is Dorothy Griffin, a former equipment supplier from the tiny southern Oklahoma town of Farris. She reportedly is cooperating with federal officials and has tape-recorded several conversations with present and former commissionrs in both states as part of the FBI investigation.

U.S. Attorney Larry Patton is conducting the Oklahoma City grand jury investigation, U.S. Attorney John Hannah the grand jury probe in Tyler. Neither will confirm an investigation is in progress, but vendors and commissioners in both states say the investigations are under way.

In addition, Oklahoma Auditor and Inspector Tom Daxon said earlier this month that he had given the FBI evidence of questionable purchases by county com-

"We have found several counties where county officials have paid in excess of the listed price for equipment," Daxon said. "We turned that information over the the FBI.'

Another source said some Oklahoma commissioners have used lease-purchase contracts to skirt a state law requiring them to take bids on major equipment purchases. "Then they buy the equipment in a month or two and pay twice what it's worth," he said.

He said there also are cases where one commissioner pays an inflated price for a single piece of heavy equipment, such as a $50,000 road grader, then sells it to a vendor for a much lower price, and the vendor in turn sells the road grader to another commissioner in another county for another inflated price. This process is then repeated several times.

Health insurance rates to increase

By STARR LEE Collegian Reporter

Students who buy health insurance through K-State next fall will be paying more than this year, but will be getting added benefits, Kathy Lungren, student attorney, said.

Students have been able to be insured through a group plan through Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas (BC-BS) since Aug. 26, 1979. BC-BS sold about 2,600 policies for the 1980-81 school

Under the one-year BC-BS policy, students could buy coverage for themselves for $123.60; a student and spouse for $250.92; a student and dependents for $273; and a student, spouse and dependents for $406.80.

The Student Health Advisory Committee sent out the specifications of the present policy and options it wanted to add in a new policy, and asked for bids from insurance companies about two months ago. Occidental Life of California offered the lowest rates.

On April 2, the committee received approval from Student Senate to adopt the Occidental Life policy. The committee is composed of the director and assistant director of Lafene Student Health Center and eight students.

UNDER THE NEW policy. student rates will be $174.50 for the year; $276.50 for student and spouse; $300.50 for student and dependents; and $438.50 for student, spouse and dependents.

Although the new rates are higher than the previous policy, Lungren pointed out they are still lower than a policy an individual could buy.

"If I just went out and bought a Blue Cross policy for myself, it would probably cost me $80 to $90 a month," Lungren said.

The BC-BS policy encourages students to use Lafene because it would normally pay only for treatment at the health center. The lower rates at Lafene, as compared to those in private practices, keep the students' insurance rates less expensive, Lungren said.

Occidental Life will pay for 100 percent of treatment under a certain amount, as BC-BS has

THE MAXIMUM amounts the policy would pay for hospital rooms and medical treatment have been updated to keep up with the present rates of hospitals.

Under the BC-BS policy, a limit of $15,000 is paid for any accident or long-term illness; the new policy will increase the maximum to $50,000.

Students who want to be treated by a doctor not at Lafene has to be referred by a doctor at Lafene or be in an emergency situation, under the BC-BS policy.

Lafene refers students to other practitioners if a service isn't offered or couldn't be handled at Lafene. For example, a student wouldn't be referred to a gynecologist because Lafene offers gynecology services.

Determining if the situation was an emergency was a problem of the BC-BS plan, Lungren said. Lafene and ultimately, BC-BS decides if it was an emergency.

"If it's my arm that's cut, to me that is an emergency," Lungren

THE NEW POLICY will allow covered students to go to other practitioners without a referral from Lafene. If the student elects to go to an off-campus doctor, the policy will pay 75 percent of the fee to a maximum of $900 and the student is responsible for the remaining 25 percent.

To be eligible for compensation, the students must notify Lafene of the treatment within 20 days.

This is the first student health policy at K-State that automatically includes maternity benefits, Lungren said. The BC-BS policy offered a maternitybenefits rider for an additional $300 a year.

According to the Manhattan BC-

BS office, about 100 women bought the rider last year, but it didn't cover women who were pregnant at the beginning of the contract year. There was a 240-day waiting period from the time the contract was signed, to when the woman was eligible for maternity benefits.

THE OLD POLICY pays $900 for a Caesarean section, $600 for a Space shuttle launched successfully; officials not alarmed about lost tiles

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - Space shuttle Columbia shot straight for the heavens on a tower of white hot flame Sunday and sailed a perfect course around earth; a spectacular beginning to an American era of making space a workplace for mankind.

Everything worked.

Flight One of the winged space freighter, piloted by John Young and Robert Crippen, got off on time, soared smoothly into orbit, and flawlessly exercised its cargo bay doors during a critical earlyflight test. Some of Columbia's troublesome tiles shook off, but officials weren't alarmed.

FLIGHT DIRECTOR Neil Hutchinson, at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, said nine thermal protection tiles are missing on the left side of the spacecraft and four to six on the right. "I don't think that's going to bother us," he said. "We are not worried about any other tiles working loose."

He called the Columbia "a super vehicle...a super piece of machinery up there."

At the start of their third orbit, Shuttle Control told the astronauts, "You guys did so good, we're going to let you stay up there for a couple days." That meant a dramatic wheels-down Tuesday at Edwards Air Force Base in California. Target time for the first runway landing of the space age-1:30 p.m. EST, 10:30 a.m. California time.

MEANWHILE, Columbia was circling 152 miles above the globe. Later, it would move up to 172 miles and remain there until it's time to land. For the first time since 1975, Americans were in

They were not alone. Two Soviet cosmonauts have been in orbit since March.

The third decade of manned space flight began, precisely at 7:00:03.963 a.m. EST, with launch of the first ship designed to go into space again and again. It was 20 years ago Sunday that Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin became the first to orbit the planet.

"That was one fantastic ride; I highly recommend it," said Crippen, a 15-year astronaut on his first trip in space. The rookie's heart rate soared like his ship, to a

Local group sponsors march to protest rape

Collegian Reporter Chanting, "Stop rape, free women," and carrying signs proclaiming their messages, a group of women marched Saturday through the streets of Manhattan.

Women Against Rape (WAR), a support and awareness group formed in the fall of 1980, sponsored the march to raise community awareness of the acts of physical violence perpetrated against women. The Manhattan march, "Women Take Back the Night," was part of a nationwide rapeawareness program.

The march started in City Park, and wound down Poyntz Avenue to 13th Street, north to Moro Street, then west through Aggieville, ending with a rally at the pavilion in City Park.

The purpose and intent of the march was expressed at the rally by Bat-Ami Bar-On, temporary assistant professor of philosophy and member of WAR.

"Behind it is a deeply-rooted commitment to protest, combat and eliminate every form of violence against women here and everywhere," she said.

THE 50-MINUTE march was kept orderly with the help of 40

By JIM LAURENCIG volunteer marshals, who participated in the march, and the cooperation of the Riley County Police Department (RCPD). Many of the officers donated their time to the march.

> Officer Gary Hannes of the RCPD congratulated the marchers and the organizers on the success of the march. Hannes's mother was one of its participants.

> The march was peaceful and a number of women joined the approximately 150 marchers enroute.

> The volume of the chants increased noticeably as the went through march Aggieville, and drew a number of spectators from Aggieville business establishments.

> MEN WERE NOT permitted to participate in the march, but they showed their support in another way. A newly-formed group, Men Against Patriarchy, provided child care service for the participants' children.

> "If men had been marching with us, women would have felt protected, and the statement the march was making was the fact that women should be allowed to walk on the streets at night alone and feel safe. Men already have that a beat of 130 times a minute.

"Oh, man, that is so pretty," he exclaimed, seeing Earth from space for the first time.

JOHN YOUNG, setting a human record with his fifth blast-off into space, maintained an even 85 beats a minute. "It sure hasn't changed any," he radioed. "It's something else out there."

"He's been telling me about it for three years," said Crippen. "When you see it it's unbelievable."

It was something else on earth, too. Even the bureaucrats were ecstatic.

"I don't feel good, I feel great," said launch director George Page.

President Reagan watched on television from the White House after his first nights sleep at home since he was shot. Shortly before launch his message was read to the astronauts: "You take the hope and prayers of all Americans with you."

ROADS AROUND Kennedy Space Center were jammed just before lift-off, just as they had been for last Friday's scheduled launch. But police said the crowds were smaller, ardor apparently dimmed by the computer problem that stopped the countdown and launch 16 minutes beforignition.

When the fuels fired, it was a thing of blinding beauty.

For two miles, Columbia rose nearly straight from its launch pad into a morning sky just losing its rosy hues. The ship's flame merged with that of the two rocket boosters buckled to the side of its silo-like fuel tank and created a golden column five times the length of the structure.

Columbia's engines, so troublesome in development, the most sophisticated powerplants ever built, performed flawlessly into orbit-gulping nearly $500,000 worth of propellants.

The shuttle is to be America's space workhorse for the rest of this century, with bookings for a variety of military, scientific and commercial tasks beginning with the first operational flight in late 1982.

It was the first time that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration had flown a spacecraft without an unmanned test flight.

Sen. Harrison Schmitt (R-N.M.), an Apollo 17 moonwalker and now chairman of the Senate space subcommittee, said the country "has in its hand a fantastic new technology, the creation of which is one of those milestones in the history of the United States that have changed our direction."

privilege," said B.J. Dille, march organizer and sophomore in general.

At the rally following the march, Sandy Coyner, director of Women's Studies at K-State, praised the marchers' participation.

"We have made ourselves part of a heritage that includes three honorable traditions," she said.

The traditions are: an unwillingness to accept injustice; non-violent protest; and a new one of women marching against violence, she said.

"We will no longer tolerate violence against women throughout the land," Coyner said.

ON SALE at the rally were WAR buttons and whistles. The whistles are to be used in conjunction with the new Community Whistle Alert Program, established by WAR. The participants were also encouraged to learn self-defense techniques. Bar-On said.

The organizers termed the march a

"We got at least twice as many (participants) as we expected," Dille said.

Marchers came from Emporia, Wichita, Kansas City and Topeka, and they ranged in age from 2 to 87.

The rally ended with the participants singing an anti-rape song by Holly Near, a feminist songwriter.

In accordance with the theme of the march, participants were encouraged not to walk home alone, and escorts were provided, Pam Parker, public relations director of the march, said.

All Occidental Life policies will include full-maternity benefits. There will be a 240day waiting period for coverage, like the BC-BS policy, Lungren said.

"We have a better program than a lot of schools, especially with this pregnancy rider," Lungren said. "The trend is to cover maternity benefits. Some even think that Title IX might require that this be covererd someday soon.'

Occidental Life kept its rates low because it believed it could sell more policies than BC-BS did, she said.

"Occidental plans on having a more aggressive sales program, like sending flyers to students," Lungren said. The University requires all foreign

If a student graduates or leaves school during the year, he is covered under the policy until the end of the contract year. However, to receive payment, he must file a claim with Lafene within 20 days of treatment.

Republicans ready to modify budget

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the House Budget Committee said Sunday that the Reagan administration has indicated to him that it is willing to compromise on its proposed spending cuts and tax reductions.

Rep. James Jones (D-Okla), said that instead of enacting a multiyear tax package put forth by President Reagan, Congress should state that it wants a multi-year tax cut but that spending reductions would have to be made first.

"The binding aspect (of the policy statement) would be the political pressure that it would place both on the administration and the Congress not to move ahead in one direction until you solve, say, the spending cut side," said Jones, interviewed on the CBS program "Face the Nation."

Majority Democrats on Jones' committee have pushed through that panel their own economic plan. It calls for a one-year tax cut instead of Reagan's three-year plan, a balanced budget by 1983 instead of 1984, and more spending on social programs than in the Reagan budget.

"There is a growing feeling that if you have the three-year, 30 percent cut in taxes that you're leaving yourself wide open to a very large deficit the third year out," Jones said Sunday.

Official keeps tie with shuttle

HOUSTON — If you ask capsule commentator Dan Brandenstein what's going to happen next inside the space shuttle Columbia orbiting Earth, he's liable to glance downward.

It's not that Brandenstein is shy or embarrassed—it's just that sometimes he has to refer to his necktie to check the schedule of the 2½-day journey of America's first reflyable spaceship.

The orange markings on the navy blue, knit tie look like a design at first glance, but they contain an abbreviated schedule of the shuttle's 36-orbit flight, printed upside down so the wearer can read them easily.

Brandenstein, one of three astronauts who talk with Commander John Young and pilot Bob Crippen during their historic voyage, conceived the idea for the tie with the silkscreened guidelines.

FAA, golfers teed off at each other

REXBURG, Idaho — Little round surface-to-air missiles have precipitated a war of nerves between the pilots and the putters at Rexburg Airport, which lies beside a driving range and a golf course.

Last year when a golf ball broke the windshield of a plane coming in for a landing and smacked the pilot in the chest, Federal Aviation Administration officials angrily wrote Mayor John Porter that the golf course was a hazard.

The city put up a sign telling golfers not to drive while aircraft were overhead, but David Field of the FAA visited the golf course and complained to city officials that none of the golfers appeared to pay any attention to whether planes were landing or taking off.

"Golf balls were driven across the end of the runway anywhere between ground level and 100-plus feet. Golf balls were on the runway," Field said.

He asked the city to close the driving range, but the city only restricted the use of the driving range to short irons. Porter said balls hit with short irons don't go as far.

The driving range is to be closed this summer, easing part of the problem. But the golf course will continue to be used, and the local golf pro, Mark Hipkins, said golfers have a few complaints of their own. He said heavily loaded planes fly over two holes of the golf course.

"Sometimes they are only 10 or 12 feet off the ground," he said, "and they can really disrupt your concentration when you're shooting."

Secret Service looking for an active agent

BOSTON — Wanted: three Secret Service agents who can run 26 miles while keeping an eye on the secretary of agriculture.

The Secret Service has begun a computer search of its personnel and of the FBI to find runners to travel the 26-mile, 385-yard course beside Agriculture Secretary John Block in the Boston Marathon April 20, the Boston Herald American reported Sunday.

Block, 45, an Illinois farmer, is one of several thousand entrants in the event, and as a cabinet officer he is entitled to federal protection.

Space shuttle

a success

After years of delay and rescheduling, the space shuttle Columbia finally roared into orbit Sunday. Like the Apollo and Gemini projects of the 1960s and the early 1970s, Columbia's flight is a testament to American technology.

Despite the delays and complications that ballooned Columbia's final price tag to $10 billion, the project is worthwhile. The information that may be obtained in the weightlessness of the shuttle's workshops in future voyages could prove beneficial to all mankind. Along with the possible advent of new pharmaceuticals and alloys of superior purity, the shuttle will undoubtedly play a leading role in defense plans.

Columbia's outrageous budget may be viewed as an unnecessary luxury in comparison to this country's more immediate domestic problems. However, technology is an essential facet of American creativity and ingenuity and Columbia is the state-of-the-art.

Perhaps this renewed exploration of the final frontier is a selfish boost to American pride in technical superiority. It could be, though, that the shuttle might eventually provide a space laboratory where earthly questions may be experimented with and ultimately answered.

Facilities limited

Editor,

After reading grounds superintendent Tom Shackelford's remarks about the use of campus fields, I think that he has the wrong attitude regarding University facilities. Once again, as with the abolition of the bike paths and proposed razing of Nichols Gym, an administration official has passed judgment on what is good for the University without regard for the wishes of the student.

Having been a personal victim of Security and Traffic's persecution, I resent the limitations of use of facilities on which I pay the upkeep.

Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross claims that various fields around campus can be reserved by groups through his office. However, having tried to do so, I know that this can be done only by organizations registered with Student Governing

Association. Saturday afternoon softball players are out of luck. However, these students are no less entitled to the use of these fields. Also, Cross stated that "It takes a few hours to determine if the area can be used." The form to request use of these areas, however, states "form shall be completed and submitted at least one week in advance of the requested activity."

As I was told by a Security and Traffic officer, the only fields on campus available for general use are north of Durland and Haymaker—one embedded with sprinkler heads, the other strewn with rocks.

Shackelford and Cross need to realize the purpose of facilities—to be used by, not restricted from, their patrons.

Image control?

Editor,

Re: Tim Brown's letter criticizing the Not-Ready-for-K-State-Players' Open House performance and Sundar Ganesan's response to Kevin Kneisley's letter in the Monday and Thursday Collegians.

Brown states our group performance had a "nearly complete lack of class, taste, intelligence and creativity." Only nearly? Ganesan superbly clarified Brown's letter as saying there was a "lack of creativity in your material." Well, folks, there seem to be a lot of people in our audiences who really enjoy classless, tasteless, nonintelligent, non-creative entertainment. Ah, what do they know?

Brown also states that "the image they projected...is not the image we want to project." I'm not quite sure what image we did project. It seems, however, that Brown knows what image "we" want to project. I'd like to officially nominate Tim Brown for the position of K-State Image Committee-person. He then could write up the "official" K-State image we will project to the world as well as to several of the less distant planets in our solar system.

In the meantime, we ask everyone associated with the school, even the pigeons around Fairchild, not to let anyone know you are until the committee has a chance to weed out the poor image-makers. You don't want us to look bad, do you?

Humans should have it so good reminded Wednesday.

I arrived at the Small Animal Hospital in the Veterinary Medical Complex, camera equipment and all, to conduct an interview for a story on the rehabilitation program for rap-at the same time is somewhat of a curse. However, it does have its heartwarming rewards, as I was

I must add a note of heart-felt praise for the veterinarians at the Small Animal Hospital and the vet school in general. Over the past four years, I have brought in all kinds of little creatures I have found injured on campus. They are treated promptly, and with great compassion—a compassion, I might add, which I find watered-down sometimes in the name of "professionalism" in human hospitals.

DR. ROBERT TAUSSIG, associate professor of surgery and medicine, and the individual I know as handling exotic animals in the vet complex, told me a young, long-eared owl had been brought in the night before with a fractured wing.

Taussig theorized the bird had either misjudged and flown into a car or something, or had been shot.

I think every child when given his first gun, and every individual who now owns a gun caught shooting non-game animals should be subject to the experience of watching what I did. Taussig wheeled in the large cage—I had never seen such as in the poor fellow's eyes when Taussig picked him up. He injected the pain-killers and cortisone. He took a wing twisted 180 degrees around and twisted it back. He taped the wings to the birds sides so he wouldn't injure himself while X-rays were being taken.

TAUSSIG SAID that many of the birds taken to the hospital have been shot; I was surprised (I don't know why) when he said people seem to think it's fun shooting owls and hawks.

The incidence of that, he said, has decreased over the past few years, though it is still a problem. He said some of these people are caught, though not enough.

One thing Taussig said fascinated me. With the words "I don't know how you feel about it, but...," he said that vets at the hospital generally feel that if a bird cannot be rehabilitated to the point where it can be put back where it came from, it should be put to sleep.

For instance, he said, if a raptor has to have a leg amputated, it is possible to teach the animal to hunt successfully again. But if the animal loses a wing, it is put to sleep as a matter of mercy.

In other words, birds were made

HE SAID one of the difficulties of selecting vet students is finding individuals with enough sensitivity to be compassionate, but strong enough to know when to make the decision that an animal must die.

As Dr. Jacob Mosier, head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine, neatly summarized my sentiments in a recent interview I was doing for another story: "We really don't want to be here to prolong the act of dying."

It strikes me as interesting that we can be so merciful with lovely birds, but cannot find it in our hearts to be similarly merciful with human beings.

If for some reason the human body becomes so damaged the individual cannot function in a way that makes him happy, (take, for instance, the individual who is faced with months of pain from cancer, and certain death anyway, and the individual, who after years of a normal physical existence, finds himself a quadriplegic), we see a voluntary decision to die or be killed as heinous.

TRUE, animals aren't people, and some have the amazing ability to dismiss living, breathing animals' lives as somehow less valuable than life in general. But if we can see the simplicity of the argument when it comes to animals and their welfare, then why is it so hard to believe that death isn't the most horrible thing that can happen to a human being?

True, animals don't make the decision. People make it for them. Which is all the more reason people should be given the choice to do with their lives as they please.

It was later determined that the owl had not been shot, and had accidentally flown into something. Taussig told me Friday he was put to sleep.

Taking back the night

Editor,

I wish to respond to the article by Damien Semanitzky concerning the organization called "Women Against Rape". I'm sorry this woman feels the need to lash out in anger toward a group that she obviously knows nothing about. The group has publicly announced its meetings via the newspapers and on Cable Channel

Six-the meetings have always been open to all women. The name of the group clearly points out why men are excluded from the meetings.

If Damien Semanitzky would have ever attended as least one meeting, instead of formulating an opinion with second-hand knowledge, this article never would have been written. Being a victim also, I feel it is way past due that Manhattan realizes that something must be done to rid society of a crime of this nature. Granted, a march will not by itself stop rape from occurring, but it will help to educate community women that they are not alone dealing with this crime.

Society will not change; we need to change society. After all, the social structure is based on patriarchal values in which women have always been considered less than human.

Women have been separated from each other for much too long. Our weakness to this crime is due partly to this separation. We women need to unite and fight back in order to combat this and other types of crime against women.

Therefore, the "Take Back the Night" march is vitally important to re-establish our identity as women, and to state our rights to be where we want to be without fear of violence.

Local workers end strike; negociations begin Tuesday

The workers who have been picketing the construction sites at the general classroom and office building and the city library are back at work today.

The strike by Carpenter's Local 918, which began Thursday morning, was against Hunter and Lundberg Inc., general contractors for the two buildings. It was caused by a dispute concerning wage negotiations.

Both sides have have agreed to resume negotiations Tuesday, Bill Lundberg, of Hunter and Lundberg, said.

The union has agreed not to picket, "as per our original agreement," unless they reach an impasse, Lundberg said.

"Hopefully, as long as we're in the negotiations, there will be no picketing," he

Charlie Cameron, the union's business representative, said the union would not picket Monday or Tuesday.

Reagan views 'spectacular' launch

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan, secluded with his family at the White House, watched the launching of the space shuttle on television Sunday and declared: "It's a spectacular sight."

A day after he was discharged from George Washington University Hospital, the president's staff made a "hard and fast" decision to leave him alone as he continues to recuperate from the bullet wound in his left lung.

Reagan arose about 10 minutes before the shuttle launch and was visited by his personal physician, Dr. Daniel Ruge. He spent the day watching television and reading briefing papers.

"He's in great shape," Ruge said through Speakes. "He looks great." Reagan was taking penicillin orally to ward off infection in the lung wound he incurred during an attempt on his life March 30.

NEVERTHELESS, aides were reluctant to disturb the president, whose only companions were his wife, Nancy and daughter, Patti.

"No one from the staff has seen him since he went into the elevator yesterday," Speakes said. "There was a conscious decision on the part of the senior staff yesterday that once he went into that elevator to leave him alone and give him some time with his family."

Reagan's doctors had advised him not to work in the Oval Office for a week and not to travel for several weeks. Speakes said the president probably would spend most of the coming week in the second floor living quarters in the Executive Mansion

The only scheduled visitors were Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr., who was likely to drop by Monday or Tuesday to report on his nine-day trip to Europe and the Middle East, and Reagan's top three economic aides, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, David Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, and Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

To a large extent, Speakes said, the president will follow the same routine he used at George Washington University Hospital. His top three aides, Edwin Meese III; James Baker III and Michael Deaver will visit him in the morning "to discuss whatever matters come up," and his national security briefing will be in written

Vice President George Bush will continue to stand in for Reagan at official White House functions. The vice president gave a speech at Tuskegee Institute on Sunday-a trip Reagan had been scheduled to makeand was addressing a group of trade association executives at the White House on Monday.

Alternatives: Students study feasibility of bus system; results to be presented during dead week

By LESLIE FROST Collegian Reporter

Students who are tired of the long walk or drive to campus are the concern of a group of students involved in a study to determine the feasibility of implementing a bus system at K-State.

Fifteen students are working on the project, offered as a special studies class in civil engineering, Bob Smith, professor of civil engineering, said.

The study is being directed by Smith and the class is coordinated by Gordon Derr, temporary instructor of civil engineering.

The project involves defining and solving the technical problems of implementing a bus system, Derr said.

Air Force to test missiles' readiness

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Air Force will conduct a series of exercises near the 17 Titan II missile sites in north-central Arkansas through the summer to test the ability of the 308th Strategic Missile Wing to respond to emergencies.

Some of the exercises will involve the movement of convoys of emergency equipment and vehicles to a missile site area, according to an Air Force statement released Sunday.

The tests will be unannounced and could be held at any of the 17 missile sites. The Air Force said it will keep the state Office of Emergency Services office and local sheriff's departments informed.

The emergency preparedness tests were developed after a missile exploded near Damascus Sept. 19, killing one person and injuring 21 others.

THE CLASS will develop several on and off-campus bus system options, and will present them to interested students. The class plans to have a presentation of its findings in the Union during the final week of classes.

"What we're shooting for at the end of the semester is to present our plans to the public," Derr said. "Mainly what we want to do is bring it to the students."

The presentation will include an explanation of costs, problems and benefits of various systems, Derr said.

"We don't want a pie-in-the-sky type of thing," he said. "We want to look at the realities."

Although the cost of the options hasn't been determined yet, the class is considering two types of financing.

One method is supporting the bus service through student fees and the other is through charging a fare for each trip.

WAYS TO MANAGE the system are also being evaluated. Service could be contracted with an independent company or through the city, Derr said.

"What I would like to see is a trial system for a year or so with the long-range goal of serving the community where the students live," Derr said.

The system would take a mimimum of one year to implement, he said.

There are several ways a bus system would benefit K-State students, Derr said.

It would provide students with a means of transportation to campus, Derr said. He cited bad weather and inadequate parking areas as problems a bus system could help alleviate.

A BUS SYSTEM would also increase the mobility of students, giving them a wider housing market to choose from.

"Landlords now have a captive audience," he said.

Because many students have no transportation they must live within walking distance of campus. They often have to pay a year's lease at higher prices because the scarcity of housing gives them no other option, he said.

Housing farther from campus could become more practical for students with the increased mobility provided by a bus system, Derr said.

Buses would also increase the mobility of students living near campus, he said. Routes to shopping areas are under consideration, "providing opportunities for students to get along without a car," he said.

Job opportunities are another benefit a bus system could give students, because some bus companies stipulate that mcan be hired as drivers, Derr said.

Teachers' strike concludes

RAVENNA, Ohio (AP) - The school board met in special session Sunday and ratified a contract that ended a five-month teachers' strike, the longest in the nation's history.

But the teachers at the meeting made it clear that bitterness lingers in the school district that serves 3,700 pupils.

The 210-member Ravenna Education Association struck Nov. 12, seeking a $300 raise on a base starting salary of $11,300. Ninety-two percent of the union members walked out at that time, but the system's nine schools stayed open with 14 nonstrikers and substitutes.

In time the issue of a master contract to govern teacher rights became dominant and by last week just 110 of the teachers were still out. The teachers ratified a master contract offer Thursday, with any pay raise contingent on a tax to be considered in a special election June 2.

"They'll be back (in school) Monday morning," said Richard Schneider, a negotiator from the Ohio Education Association. "There are still battles to be fought, though."

He said between 400 and 600 pupils stayed away from classes during the 85-schooldaystrike because their families supported the teachers, and it is up to the school board to find a way to allow these students to make up the course material.

Burt Hall remodeling to take over 7 months

By LIZ DICKENSON Collegian Reporter

The usual flow of students going to classes and the assorted lectures filtering from the classroom into the hall are no longer normal occurences in Burt Hall. Instead, as remodeling of the building has started, the halls are full of workmen, dust, old boards and plaster from the walls and ceilings.

Remodeling began April 6 and is scheduled for completion "in a little over seven months," said Vince Cool, director of planning and architectural services.

Burt Hall was constructed in 1923 as a small-animal hospital, but now primarily houses classes and labs in biochemistry and horticulture therapy.

The total cost of remodeling, including materials, labor and new lab equipment is $398,481, Cool said.

All parts of the building except the north wing will receive bome type of remodeling, he said.

REMODELING PLANS for Burt Hall will primarily effect biochemistry offices and laboratory suites. No classrooms will be remodeled.

"Basically, remodeling for the hall is to provide more space for biochemistry labs," Cool said. There will be two lab suites, which include storage facilities and "whatever is required to set up a laboratory group for a particular operation," he said.

Offices in the building will be made larger, Cool said. A new heating and cooling system will also be installed.

Most of the remodeling will take place inside the building. Outside work will concentrate on patching windows which formerly housed air conditioning units.

Because of the remodeling, several classes and offices have been temporarily relocated to other campus buildings, including the new general classroom and office building.

THE CLASSES and offices that were not moved should expect some inconveniences until the remodeling is completed.

Having no restroom facilities is the largest inconvenience, according to Pam Reves, clerk-typist for the horticulture therapy department.

"The bathroom was taken out the first day," Reves said.

Dust is another inconvenience facing the few people still in the building.

"The dust is starting to get real bad," Reves said. "It filters down from upstairs."
Although the vents have been covered with filters, the dust still makes its way down and covers everything, she said.

The noise caused by the workers throwing excess materials into a truck is also causing problems, Reves said.

Power outages may also become a problem as the remodeling continues, Cool said.

"There will be some occasions when the electricity will have to be shut off for short periods of time," Cool said. "Everyone will be notified before any power is cut off."

The outages are expected to last from five minutes to "a couple of hours," he said.

The improvements on the building "needed to be done and these few inconveniences are to be expected," Reves said.

Bush says Reagan administration not insensitive to poor, minorities

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP) — Vice President George Bush said Sunday that critics of President Reagan's proposed budget cuts are wrong in raising doubts that the administration is insensitive to the economic problems of blacks and other minorities.

"Believe me when I say, put aside your doubts," the vice president assured a largely black audience. "In this president and in his administration black and minority Americans have a man who will act, not deal in rhetorical flim-flam, to improve the quality of life for those who have suffered from bigotry and discrimination in the past."

On his first out-of-town assignment since Reagan was shot March 30, Bush substituted for the recuperating president at Tuskegee Institute's Founders Day and Centennial Celebration. The predominantly black school was founded by renowned educator Booker T. Washington 100 years ago to educate former slaves and their children.

IN ROUTE from Washington on the same plane Reagan normally flies, Bush said the president was a little tired when he saw him at the White House on Saturday. "I think he's going to be (tired). The tendency will be to push too much in on him. I think his tendency should be to resist that."

Looking back over the events of the past 13 days since this assassination attempt, Bush said, "history will record it all worked pretty darn well ... a limited degree of confusion."

Bush said that in the weeks ahead he will continue to stand in for the president "until he gets back. But I think it will get gradually de-emphasized."

Bush said he will substitute for Reagan at a fund-raising speech in Los Angeles on April 23 and the next day at a similar event in Hartford, Conn. Asked if he would give Maureen Reagan away at her April 24 wedding in California, Bush joked, "I am not going that far in my stand-in responsibilities."

IN HIS SPEECH, Bush pointed out that Reagan, had he been able to attend, would have been the first president since Franklin Roosevelt to visit the school.

Roosevelt and his New Deal administrations saw the actual or intellectual foundations of many of the social programs Reagan wants to trim.

Bush took note of the "questions raised by some minority group leaders regarding the attitude of this administration" toward protecting the political, social and economic rights of minorities.

American Heart Association

"If I leave this audience with only a single idea here today," said Bush, "let it be this: These doubts just aren't right. They are totally unfounded. President Reagan cares deeply about the lives and livelihoods, the safety and security, of all Americans, regardless of race, sex, color or creed."

British violence:

London's street battles between blacks, police injure at least 194

LONDON (AP) - Violent clashes between blacks and police erupted Sunday for the second straight night in the Brixton district of south London, hours after police sealed off the burned and looted neighborhood and angry youths jeered touring Home Secretary William Whitelaw.

A police spokesman said the rioters were attacking police "with anything they can get their hands on" and described the clashes as "very violent."

The new fighting broke out after more than 1,000 police officers cordoned off much of the working-class district following Saturday's violence, among the worst racial violence to erupt in Britain since World War II.

SCOTLAND YARD said at least 194 people, 165 of them police, were injured by rocks, gasoline bombs and bottles hurled in running street battles and attacks on police, medics and firemen.

Angry young blacks screamed "Sieg Heil" and gave clenched-fist salutes as Whitelaw toured the smoldering and rubble-strewn streets ringed by a posse of police officers earlier in the day.

A grim-faced Whitelaw voiced "extreme distress and horror" at the six hours of fierce rioting that ripped through the rundown ghetto Saturday night.

Leaders in the community, largely populated by West Indians, had predicted the heavy police presence would provoke new violence.

POLICE OFFICERS, including units from the crack Special Patrol Group fastreaction force, sealed off a six-block zone where the worst of the violence occurred, halting all traffic into the area.

A West Indian community leader warned, "The trouble is off the streets for the moment, but this area is seething. Feeling against the police is running very high."

In Saturday night's riots, some 40 vehicles were set afire, including several police cars. Police said nearly every store and business in central Brixton was damaged or destroyed and scores of businesses were looted. Thirty buildings, including a department store, a church, a school and two bars, were completely gutted.

WITNESSES SAID the violence occurred after two white detectives stopped and searched a black taxi driver in Brixton's Railton Road, known locally as "the front line" after earlier clashes between blacks and London's overwhelmingly white police

Rene Webb, a West Indian who is a former chairman of Lambeth Community Relations Council, said, "This has set the cause of race relations in south London back 20 years. These kids are furious with the police and will carry on until the cops go home."

London Police Commissioner Sir David McNee claimed that "troublemakers from elsewhere" provoked the worst of the Four thousand VIPS watch launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., (AP) - As the countdown hit two minutes before launch, a hush fell over the stands. Jerry Brown got out his binoculars. Neil Armstrong scrambled to the top of the bleachers for a better look. Scores stood transfixed at water's edge, the closest they could get to Columbia, 31/2 miles away.

Tears welled and chants of "go, go, go," boomed from the crowd of 4,000 VIPS as the ground shook, flames spewed and the spaceship thundered upright from earth in a huge billowing spiral of steam.

"Good liftoff, smooth flight, beautiful sight," said Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon.

"Fantastic, great," said Brown, the usually loquacious California governor who stood awed and groping for words.

"There's nothing like having your organs shake inside you from the force of those engines to bring about an awareness of what we're doing," said Russell Schweickart, a former Apollo 9 astronaut.

Schweickart clutched a calculator he used to simulate countdown himself, then squinted into the blazing Florida sun and followed the shuttle's path for four minutes after it streaked from pad 39A.

"It's awful good after much too long a pause to see us going up again," he said. The mission, he said, is "not to escape the earth but to care for earth. I wish them God-speed."

Politicians, diplomats and businessmen put other things aside to return to the special viewing site at to watch astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen finally blastoff on their 541/2-hour mission.

Among them were Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W.Va.); Rep. Don Fuqua (D-Fla.); former astronaut James McDivitt of Gemini 4 and Apollo 9, representatives of space agencies in India, Spain and West Germany, corporate executives, families of space workers, and a science-fiction movie producer from Hollywood.

The special invitation crowd had dwindled by one-third since Friday's scrubbed launch, with movie stars, legislators and some of the better-known celebrities among the missing. "A lot of them had other commitments and couldn't come back," said Arnold Richmond, chief of visitors services for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

NASA chartered a plane to ferry congressmen, senators and foreign diplomats from Washington. Friday they used a wide-bodied jet that sat 260. Sunday it was a Boeing 727 with a 140-seat capacity.

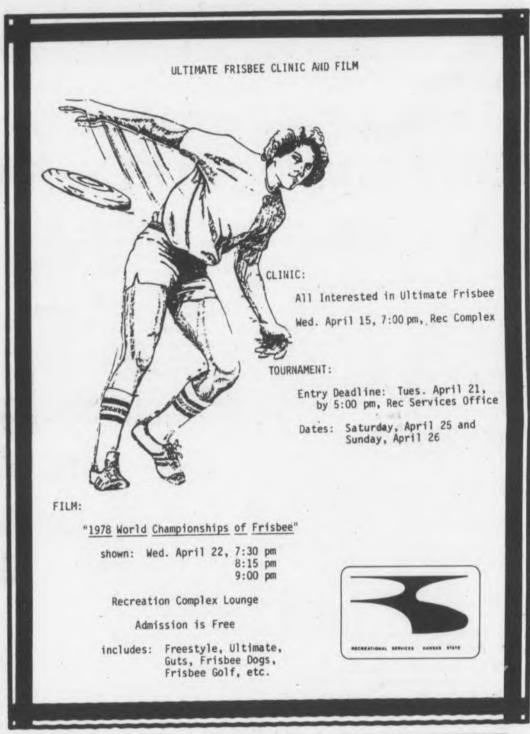

Cheer Up Maureen, It's Your 21st! HAPPY BIRTHDAY Love, L.M., K.B., AND T.D.

Steven Spielberg, producer of the space thriller, "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," stayed in Florida to wait for the launch.

"It's the the best, big bang I've ever seen," he said, sporting a NASA baseball cap. He concluded: "I realize movies are imaginative and wonderful, but they are toys compared to this."

Sun's shining in KC—Kings claim 3-1 command

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The Phoenix Suns may be ready to set in the National Basketball Association playoffs, and perhaps no one is more surprised than Kansas City coach Cotton Fitzsimmons.

"Yeah, I'm surprised that we're leading 3-to-1. I'm not going to kid you," Fitzsimmons said after his Kings held off the Suns 102-95 Sunday to take a commanding 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series.

The underdog Kings third straight victory sends the playoff series back to Phoenix for Game 5 Wednesday night.

Hardnosed Ernie Grunfeld poured in a game-high 27 points and Scott Wedman and Reggie King rattled in 21 apiece to pace the Kings, who beat the Suns for the sixth time in nine meetings this season.

The Kansas City defense, led by Grunfeld's three steals, capitalized on 15 Phoenix turnovers, while the Kings lost the ball just nine times. The Kings also blocked six shots and stole the ball seven times.

The Kings led throughout the second half, building a 91-80 lead on Grunfeld's 12-footer with 5:53 left in the game.

But six straight Phoenix points trimmed the bulge to five, and moments later Truck Robinson's layup cut the Kansas City margin to 98-95 with less than a minute left.

But the Kings locked up the game at the free throw line when center Sam Lacey hit a pair of charity tosses to make it 100-95 with 36 seconds left and Wedman added two more with 18 seconds left Grunfeld got eight of his points during a 15-7 Kansas City spurt that made it 87-77 midway through the final quarter.

Phoenix led only once in the contest, and that came on a controversial play.

With 3:10 left in the half, Lacey was whistled for a technical, following a shoving match with Phoenix's Alvan Adams after a rebound. Phoenix assistant coach Al Bianchi rushed onto the court and shoved Lacey and both benches cleared, but no punches were thrown.

The Suns' Dennis Johnson then hit the free throw to give Phoenix a 47-46 lead, but Kansas City then ran off nine straight points and led 55-50 at the half.

Quiz saves win for KC, Leonard

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dennis Leonard weakened in the ninth after pitching six hitless innings, but Dan Quisenberry came to the rescue once again.

"He bailed me out a lot last year and I hope he continues this year," Leonard said after Quisenberry retired the side and preserved a 4-2 Kansas City American League baseball victory Sunday.

"The dishes are always dirty when I come in," said Quisenberry, who tied for the American League lead last season with 33 saves. "There's always something for me to clean up."

Leonard, who allowed three hits before being lifted, said he "kind of ran out of steam" after throwing 95 pitches in the chilly weather. He said he wasn't affected by the one-hour rain delay prior to the start of the game.

Leonard, a 29-year-old righthander who has won 20 or more games in three of the last four seasons, retired the first 15 Baltimore batters before Rick Dempsey walked on a 3-1 pitch to open the sixth.

Rich Dauer broke up the no-hit bid with a leadoff ground ball double past the third base bag in the seventh. Kansas City left fielder Amos Otis then dropped a one-out fly ball by Eddie Murray for his second such error in two games but Leonard squelched the threat by striking out Dan Graham and Doug DeCinces with runners at first and second.

Baltimore's other hits were a two-out double by Al Bumbry in the eighth and Ken Singleton's leadoff single in the ninth. The Orioles then loaded the bases with none out on an error by second baseman Frank White and a walk.

Quisenberry then was called on, and he got the final three outs but not before Baltimore scored on a bases-loaded walk and a sacrifice fly.

Baltimore starter Mike Flanagan, who retired the first 10 Kansas City batters, was touched for a two-run homer by Clint Hurdle in the fifth inning following a twoout single by John Wathan. The Royals added two more runs in the sixth.

Women netter's 8th-place finish confirms polls

By CARI CAVASSA Collegian Reporter

The coaches' poll predicted an eighth place finish for the K-State women's tennis team. And unfortunately the 'Cats proved them right, finishing last in the Big 8 Championships in Oklahoma City Thursday

Oklahoma State also lived up to the coaches' expectations by placing first with 67 points. Colorado was second with 63, followed by defending champion Oklahoma with 56. Fourth went to Missouri with 41, with Kansas-picked to finish seventhtaking fifth with 30 points. Tying for sixth and seventh was Iowa State and Nebraska with 26 points.

Although it secured a firm grip on eighthplace with 15 points, K-State did improve over past performances at the meet.

Doubles competition gained the seventh-"We were four points better and had 100 percent more better finishes than last year," coach David Hacker said.

K-State brought home two sixth-place and two seventh-place finishes compared to last year's two sevenths.

The first round Thursday sent only two K-Stater's, No. 5 Kris Breisch and No. 6 Sherry Nelson, into the losers' semifinals bracket which could promise each no better than fifth-place finishes. The rest of the 'Cats lost both their first and consolation

In Friday's play, Breisch defeated Kim Fuller of Iowa State 5-7, 6-0, 6-0 for sixth place—the highest a K-State player has ever finished in Big 8 competition. By default, Nelson reached the semifinals of the losers' bracket, only to be defeated by KU's Marcie McGrew 6-1, 6-1. Nelson also took sixth place.

place finishes for K-State. The No. 2 team of Candie Gwin and Kathy Manning defeated Sue Moore and Judy Huerter of Nebraska in a tough match 7-6, 6-4.

"I was very pleased with Candie's and Kathy's win over Nebraska," Hacker said. "It was very much of an upset."

The other seventh place was picked up by the No. 3 doubles team of Breisch and Nelson through default.

In other matches Friday, Kim Wishard of Iowa State beat K-State's No. 1 player, Tamie Peugh, 6-2, 6-0. No. 2 Brenda Bennett was defeated by Mimi Magiera of Nebraska 6-2, 6-2. In No. 3 singles, Nebraska's Ann Swanson defeated Candie Gwin 6-2, 6-0. K-State's No. 4 singles netter was defeated by KU's Corey Mason.

Doubles action dealt a 3-6, 6-0, 6-2 blow to the No. 1 team of Peugh and Bennett by KU's Shari Schrufer and Maureen Guilfoil.

Bradley paces 'Cats to No. 1 spot at meet

Seven first-place finishes paved the way for the K-State's men track team Saturday as it took first out of a field of seven teams with 176 points at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla.

"I thought we were capable of winning the meet," coach Mike Ross said, "but the caliber of performances was above what I expected."

Behind K-State was Oklahoma State with 145 points, Oklahoma with 130, Oklahoma Christian with 31, Central State with 30, Oral Roberts with 15, Oklahoma Baptist with 13 and Southwestern with 1.

Once again, Ray Bradley paced the Wildcats, setting meet records in both the shot put and discus. Bradley heaved the shot 61-101/4 and spun the discus 191-91/2 to claim gold medals.

"Ray responded real well," Ross said. "I think he's just about full-force now and should be ready for the KU Relays this

Bradley has been slowed the last two and a half weeks with a pulled hamstring, the result of running a 40-yard dash for pro

Ross also praised the performance of high jumper Steve Cotton, who tied a K-State school record with a jump of 7-1 that was good for second. Cotton tied Ray McGill's 11-year record with his effort.

Other Wildcats to bring home golds were Mark Smith in the triple jump (48-8), Rodney Brogden in the long jump (23-71/4) and Rick McKean in the 1,500 meters

Also, Northeast Louisiana State transfer Ray Hansen, competing unattached while he sits out this year because of NCAA rules, won the javelin with a toss of 267-8, which would have been good enough to break Bill Floerke's 16-year school record of 266-51/2 had he been competing with the team.

Joe Bramlage, a winner at Texas last week, took second with a throw of 249-3. Others finishing second for K-State were Mark Sageser in the 3,000 meter steeplechase (9:16.9), Brian Howie in the 110 meter high hurdles (14.60), Steve Wright in the 400 meter dash (47.32), Sammy Rotich in the 800 meter run (1:50.59), Doug Lytle in the pole vault (17-0), McKean in the 5,000 meter run (14:45.46) and the 1,600 meter relay team

Wildcats' baseball team salvages 1 game at OU

First baseman Joe Goedert and pitcher Louie Trujillo helped save the weekend for K-State as the Wildcats salvaged one game out of four against Oklahoma in Norman.

Goedert slammed a game-winning home run in the top of the eighth inning, breaking a 4-4 tie and propelling the Wildcats to a 5-4 victory Saturday afternoon in the series' finale.

Trujillo, who threw a four-hitter, then held Oklahoma in check in the last of the seventh to raise his record to 3-1.

It was the lone game in which a K-State pitcher was able to check the hard-hitting Sooners, who swept Friday's doubleheader by scores of 17-3 and 14-3. They also won Saturday's first game, 15-0.

"Pitching was the key," K-State coach Dave Baker said. "We weren't able to contain their hitters."

Up and down the lineup, Baker said the Sooners hit consistently. OU collected 47 hits in the four-game series and hammered K-State pitching for five homers in the first three games, three of them by pitcher-first baseman Ray Hayward.

Hayward, 6-1, went the distance in the first game of the series, allowing three runs on five hits. Meanwhile, OU jumped on K-State starter Doug Able, 1-4, for five runs in the first inning.

In the second game Friday, K-State chased OU starter Danny Jackson, 5-1, with three runs in the sixth inning, which cut the Sooner lead to 5-3.

But disaster quickly followed. Oklahoma rocked Mike Johnson, 3-3, for nine runs in the bottom of the inning.

In Saturday's first game, five K-State pitchers could not stop OU from scoring in every inning. Sooner starting pitcher Bruce Hinz, 5-1, and reliever David Brooks combined to allow only four hits. Wildcat starter Mickey Fleeman, 2-3, took the loss.

Baker praised the Sooners, who he said "came ready to play. Once they got it going, we couldn't stop them."

In losing three out of four conference games to Oklahoma, the Wildcats dropped to 4-8 in the Big 8 and 25-17 overall. The Sooners improved to 7-5 and 32-6. women, p.1

Weekend sports

Men's Tennis

The weekend spelled defeat for the men's tennis team as it experienced losses against Oklahoma State, Kansas, and Colorado in the K-State Invitational Tournament at Cottonwood Racquet Club.

Top 10 power Oklahoma State took first, defeating KU 9-0, K-State 9-0 and Colorado 7-2. Colorado and KU tied for second.

"We're talking different leagues playing against Oklahoma State," coach Steve Snodgrass said after the team competed against OSU Sunday. "But I was pleased with the doubles team of Steve Webb and Matt Westfall."

"They're (OSU) one of the top teams around," Webb added. "We were just outclassed by them. But we played really well in our doubles match."

The No. 3 doubles team of Webb and Westfall came the closest to defeating any OSU entry—they were beaten 3-6, 6-4, 6-4 by Steve Town and Steve Wyett.

Singles action resulted in K-State's No. 1 player, Jeff Henderson, being defeated by Mark Johnson 6-0, 6-1. Peter Johnston beat the 'Cats No. 2 Webb 6-2, 6-1, while No. 3 Dan Forrester was defeated by Eddie Myers 6-0, 6-1.

No. 4 singles Westfall lost to Kirk Loomis 6-2, 6-0; No. 5 Dave Krizman was beaten 6-1, 6-3 by Wyett. OSU's Town defeated No. 6 Mike Goss 6-0, 6-0.

In No. 1 doubles action, Johnson and Loomis beat K-State's Henderson and Krizman 6-1, 6-4; Forrester and Goss were defeated 6-0, 6-0 by Myers and Johnston.

Action Saturday against KU concluded with K-State picking up three wins and six losses. Victories were gained by Henderson in No. 2 singles, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 over Ed Bolin; and No. 6 singles Goss beat Tom Hall 6-2, 4-6, 6-4. The doubles team of Webb and Westfall also won, defeating Oscar Careata and Royce Bunag 6-1, 6-3.

After taking a 9-0 pummeling by Colorado Friday, Snodgrass said, "I think the fellows thought CU was better than we expected and consequently it showed. They decisively beat us."

Women's Track

Even though the K-State women's track team only captured one first place at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla. Saturday, many of the Wildcats brought home silver and bronze medals.

The Wildcats took second in the meet with 148 points. Oklahoma won with 153 points

Janel LeValley brought home the only gold medal for K-State, winning the 1500 meter run in 4:42.61.

The rest of the K-State team, though, made a good showing in the five-team affair.

In the long jump, Kim Hagger took second with a leap of 18-8 and Annette Sittenauer took fourth at 18-6½.

Janice Stucky finished second in the shot put with a heave of 46-5 and third in the discus with a throw of 151-3.

Beets Kolarik tied for third with Renee Nickles of Oklahoma in the high jump with a leap of 5-5.

The 'Cats had both Kari Jones and Peggy Hopkins place in the javelin. Jones finished second with a throw of 139-2 and Hopkins took third with a toss of 136-0.

five-team round-robin tournament over the weekend.

The 'Cats dealt blows to Marymount, Washburn and Benedictine College. They were defeated by the eventual tournament champion, Southwest Baptist College of Boliver, Mo.

Combining two runs and six hits, the 'Cats won against Washburn 2-0 Saturday as freshman Cindy Farris pitched a one-hit game. They won again that afternoon-beating Benedictine College 5-1 with Janel Anderson yielding only four hits.

K-State won Friday 5-4 against Marymount. The win was gained in the nine-inning game through a wild pitch as Chris Williams made the run. Lisa Packard had two hits and Pat Howard recorded a home run to put her at seven for the season.

K-State got only three hits and one run off Southwest Baptist, which took the game 5-1. Football

With what coach Jim Dickey called one of the best turnouts in his four years as coach here, K-State went through an 80-play scrimmage Saturday at KSU Stadium to climax the two-day high school football coaches' clinic.

"We had a real good scrimmage," said Dickey, who added that 137 prep coaches registered for the clinic. "A lot of people did a lot of things well."

Offensively, Dickey singled out all six quarterbacks he used, and the running of Jeff Meyers and Kilisimasi Toluao. He also was pleased with Rawn Williams, who was moved to tight end from fullback this spring.

Defensively, safety Jim Morris, linebacker Will Cokeley and linemen Mike Simeta and Kyle Clawson caught Dickey's attention.

"It's obvious were farther along offensively than defensively and it's obvious we're more mature on offense," Dickey

Basketball

A crowd of more than 500 honored K-State coach Jack Hartman and his team Friday night for the final time this season at the 1981 basketball appreciation banquet.

All-American Rolando Blackman received the Porky Morgan most inspirational player trophy and also was presented the first-ever Exemplary Award.

Hartman was recognized again for being named co-coach of the year by the National Association of Coaches, and freshman Steve Reid won the Dean Harris freshman of the year trophy.

1980 Royal Purple receives ACP Pacemaker Award

The 1980 Royal Purple has been named winner of the Pacemaker Award by the Associated Collegiate Press (ACP). It is the highest honor a yearbook can receive.

Pacemakers are awarded in two divisions based on the size of the schools.

The K-State yearbook, which last won a pacemaker in 1936, shares the award with the winner in the small-school category, Northwest Missouri State University, said Janet Terry, 1980 editor and 1981 Royal Purple adviser.

To be eligible for the Pacemaker Award, a yearbook must be judged an All-American, which requires four out of a possible five "Marks of Distinction." Mark of Distinction categories include photography, copy, design, coverage and concept.

The yearbook, which received marks in each of the five categories, was then judged for the Pacemaker Award. The selection was done by three judges, selected by the ACP.

The Royal Purple received the All-American rating for the 1980 yearbook at the beginning of the fall semester.

Judging for the Pacemaker Award is completed after all summer and fall publications of the 1980 yearbooks are out.

The Royal Purple has received All-American ratings each year from 1936 to 1972. The last one was presented for the 1976 book, Terry said.

A plaque will be presented to a member of the Royal Purple staff at the ACP's national convention in October in Miami Beach, Fla., Terry sxid.

The pacemaker is given its name because the winners set the trends for other year-

Terry also said that because they keep up with current trends, more people are interested in buying the yearbook.

Explorers break tradition; vote to admit women

NEW YORK (AP) — For three quarters of a century, at the poles, in Darkest Africa, on the moon, the men of the Explorers Club accepted any challenge except the admission of women. On Sunday, in New York, they took the final dare.

The club's members embarked on a new, surprising adventure by voting 753 to 618 to admit women members.

Even Explorers president Dr. Charles Brush, who had pressed for the change, was stunned by the 753-to-618 vote, which was taken by secret mail ballot earlier this year. Two members of the board of directors predicted that as many as 300 members would resign over the vote.

"You have no idea how strongly some men feel about this," said John Flint, a board member. "These are very conservative guys who are afraid women would change things."

THE VOTE MEANT that NASA astronaut Dr. Kathryn Sullivan, who has flown higher than any other woman in the world, and Sylvia Earle, who has dived deeper than any man or woman, will be the first female Explorer.

But the Explorer tradition remains male, or at least macho.

Old-timers still brave the wilds of the Upper East Side to gather in a room that looks like an English club room in the headiest days of Empire. Stuffed animal heads stare down from the rafters and a rack of old hunting rifles leans against the wall near a lamp stand made of donkeys' hooves and a set of African blowpipes.

Above the fireplace, bracketed by elephant tusks, hangs a painting of a member who had to amputate his own frozen toes.

The announcement closed out the presidency of Brush, who favored female membership and has tried to steer the club into an era when exploration means rowing across the Atlantic in a 25-foot boat, diving 1,800 feet below the ocean or trying to raise the Titanic.

BUT. HE WAS asked in an interview at the club, what new places are left to explore? And isn't rowing across the ocean like trying to type a manuscript with your nose?

"There are more frontiers than ever," said Brush, an archaeologist who led his first expedition in the Himalayas when he was 14 and has been exploring ever since.

Today, he said, there are plenty of unexplored caves, unscaled peaks and uncharted wastelands. And there is outer space, the final frontier.

Brush has urged on the Explorers a broader definition of exploration which would embrace investigation through a cope or in a laboratory.

But what would old Explorers like Teddy Roosevelt, Charles Lindbergh, Robert Peary and Edmund Hillary say? Doesn't real exploring suggest an element of necessary risk?

"Many of our members would say so," he admitted. But, he added, there are subtle risks, the kind astronaut J. Edgar Mitchell took by participating in parapsychology experiments on which most scientists were sure to frown.

"Part of exploring is a frame of mind, a willingness to challenge dogma, to be on the edge." Brush said.

THAT IS WHAT had bothered him about the club's males-only admission policy: if explorers by definition challenge tradition and embrace change, why cling to the past? Virtually all the club's programs had been open to women, but many male members had objected to integration of the sexes on the grounds it would destroy the club's special "camaraderie."

"There's a lot of tradition around here," he said, glancing at the stuffed heads around the room. "You have to respect it, but we shouldn't be governed by it.'

The club, which has grown to include about 3,400 members in 58 nations, has always been a mixture of "wild characters and sober, scientific types," he said.

The combination has made for lively disputes. Recently, some members have questioned the wisdom of giving professional explorer Mike Harris a flag for his highly publicized attempt to find and raise the Titanic.

BUT, SAID BRUSH, last summer's Titanic expedition "stirred people's imaginations. Too much of the world is humdrum. No matter what you think of (the Titanic project) it's not mediocre."

The Explorers Club was founded in 1904 by two survivors of a sailing expedition that set out in 1884 to explore the coast of northern Canada but strayed off course. By the time a Navy vessel reached the freezing, starving survivors, three winters had passed and 17 men had died.

The two survivors, Gen. A.W. Greely and David Brainard, made a pact to meet each year on the anniversary of their rescue and gorge themselves with food and drink. From these meetings, the club emerged.

The club's annual dinners carry on this tradition with exotic hors d'oeuvres that have included baked Mexican agave worms, fried Katanga termites, pickled African honeybees and marinated boar.

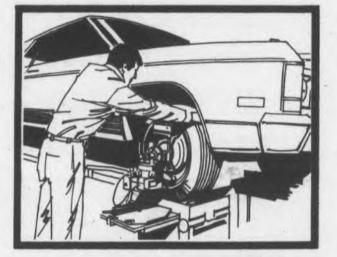

Until World War II the club was known for two types-the jungle explorer and the polar explorer.

The former accounts for the popular conception of the Explorer: a wealthy, brave individualist, maybe a little eccentric, dressed in jungle jacket and pith helmet, setting off for Africa, rifle in hand.

But today the Explorers are more akin to a service organization. They arrange talks and lectures at the club's Tudor townhouse headquarters in Manhattan and spend more than $100,000 a year to finance expeditions-by young men and women.

Officials foresee 'no problems' with landing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - After two flawless days in orbit, the shuttle Columbia and her crew prepared Monday for the searing, dangerous test of a spaceship's ability to survive a winged re-entry and land like an airliner.

There remained questions concerning the integrity of heatshielding tiles on Columbia's underbelly, adding extra tension to mission end. But a flight controller said, simply, "We see no problems...Everything is going good."

Mission beginning and mission middle have been just like that.

"The only thing bad is we're going to have to come down," said commander John Young, making a record fifth space flight.

During a space-to-White House conversation, Young told Vice President George Bush that "the spaceship is just performing beautifully."

THAT WAS THE opinion of everyone connected with the trial flight of a spacecraft that had never been tested before in orbit.

"I think your trip is just going to ignite the excitement and forward thinking for this country," said Bush. "We'll be watching that reentry and landing with great interest on behalf of the whole country." For astronauts Young and Robert Crippen, the scheduled 1:28 p.m. EST touchdown on the Rogers Dry Lake desert runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California will mark the com-whose problems were minor and triumphs big.

For touchdown day, the forecast at the lakebed landing strip calls for clear skies and little wind. "That's ready made to order," said Shuttle Control. "Sounds good," Young said.

BECAUSE TWO OF the shuttle's heat resistant tiles were missing and a dozen damaged on the top of the spacecraft, the Air Force took high resolution photographs of the more sensitive underside of the ship as it passed over Hawaii.

A source said the Air Force pictures showed the underside tiles were apparently all in place. However, NASA officials said clouds obscured the view and the photographic results were inconclusive. They said specialists had studied video and long-lens photography of the shuttle's launch and found no damage to the critical

"We are very interested in understanding what went on, but there is still no concern," said spokesman Charles Redmond. "If you define a major problem as one where we think there might be danger to the lives of the crew members, no, this doesn't come anywhere near being a major problem."

DURING MONDAY'S broadcast activities, Young was the talkative one as Columbia sailed in its 172mile-high orbit. Going over Africa, he told ground trackers in Bot-pletion of a textbook orbital flight swana: "I should have brought an Instamatic."

After using the shuttle's small maneuvering jets, he radioed: "Man, you should hear these thrusters going off here in the nose. They really move this thing around and you can see them too."

Things got a little chilly during the astronauts' first night in the Columbia and Crippen awakened after nearly eight hours sleep strapped into the cockpit, saying, "We feel grand but we got about ready to break out the long undies.

Shuttle control fixed the temperature problem.

Most of the work assigned the two astronauts was to shake down the shuttle's untried systems.

Mission planners said before the flight that just getting the ship up and down again safely would satisfy 99 percent of the objectives. Sunday's launch satisfied half that goal spectacularly.

Fraternities counseled not to pay debts

By JILL MATUSZAK Collegian Reporter

K-State fraternities have been advised not to pay debts owed by Fraternity Cooperative Inc. in a controversy over the payment for chapter composites, or group pictures.

An unpaid contract with the Edward Vantine Studios. Hamilton, New York, has resulted in a $4,237.40 debt that Vantine claims the fraternities now owe, Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, Vantine Studios contracted with the co-op, which folded Feb. 15, to do composites for some of the member fraternities. The fraternities were to pay the co-op, that was in turn to pay Vantine.

After the co-op, formed about a decade ago to provide convenience to greek houses in ordering food and supplies, folded, Vantine Studios called the Greek Affairs office and was told of the co-op's collapse, Robel said.

The studio told Robel the fraternities were responsible for the debt owed by the co-op and "advised the fraternities to seek legal counsel," she said.

ROBEL SAID she spoke with Richard Seaton, University attorney, who researched the co-op's

After looking over the co-op's files, Seaton concluded there was not an "agency relationship" between the co-op and the fraternities, Robel said. An agency relationship would have made the fraternities liable for the debts, because the co-op would have been acting as an agent, or middleman, for the fraternities, she said.

However, the files showed the coop had charged a sales tax to the fraternities for the composites and the handling of the transaction, Robel said. Seaton told Robel the sales tax indicated a sale had taken place between the co-op and the fraternities. which then "discharged the chapter's obligation," Robel said.

At a recent Interfraternity Council meeting, Robel said the fraternities who had paid the co-op for the composites were advised not to send payment to Vantine Studios.

THE STUDIO has turned the matter over to their lawyers, according to a studio representative:

"Legally, we don't know where we stand," she said.

According to studio records, 16 fraternities owed Vantine at the time of the co-op's folding. The five fraternities that had not paid the co-op for the composites, have paid the studio and three other fraternities have sent the studio their cancelled checks from payment to the co-op.

The representative stressed the relationship between the studio and the fraternitites was good and they were certain they would have been paid for the composites if the bills had gone directly to the

"The organization instructed us to collect from the co-op," she said. "That assured them of a lower price."

Daily News takes prize for general reporting

NEW YORK (AP) — The 29-member staff of the Longview, Wash. Daily News won the 1981 Pulitzer Prize for general reporting Monday for coverage of the eruptions of Mount St. Helens.

The national reporting award went to John Crewdson of The New York Times, for his stories about illegal aliens and immigration.

The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer took the gold medal for Meritorious Public Service for 22 articles and eight editorials calling attention to the failure of government and industry and the medical profession to control the problem of "brown lung." It is a disease attributed to invisible cotton dust breathed by 150,000 textile workers in the Carolinas.

For the first time in 46 years, no award was given for editorial writing.

In the field of letters and drama, the off-Broadway "Crimes of the Heart," a first full-length play by author-actress Beth Henley, won the drama prize. The play, due to debut on Broadway in the autumn, deals with the interwoven lives of three eccentric sisters in a small Mississippi town.

The prize for fiction went to "A Confederacy of Dunces," a comic novel written in the 1960s by John Kennedy Toole, who committed suicide in 1969 at the age of 32.

Publication of the book was credited to the persistence of the author's mother, Thelma Toole, who was turned down by numerous publishers before she showed it to novelist Walker Percy, who persuaded the Louisiana State University Press to publish it.

For the first time in 16 years, there was no award for music in the current selections.

The Longview Daily News, the daily newspaper closest to the volcano, was cited for the hundreds of stories and photographs the entire staff produced in the months following the cataclysmic eruption of May

"It's something every journalist dreams about," Managing Editor Bob Gaston said after being notified of the award. "But very few on small papers have a chance to have that dream come true." The newspaper has a circulation of 27,500.

The Pulitzers were endowed by the late Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of the old New York World, and are awarded annually by Columbia University upon the recommendation of the Pulitzer Prize board. All prizes are $1,000, except for the public service award which comes with a gold

The investigative reporting prize was won by Clark Hallas and Robert Lowe, of the Arizona Daily Star in Tucson, for their investigation of the athletic department of the University of Arizona.

Shirley Christian of The Miami Herald won the prize for reporting of international affairs for her dispatches from Central Mike Peters of the Dayton (Ohio) Daily News, won the prize for cartooning. Among cartoons specifically cited was one contrasting health warnings against saccharin with the lack of restrictions on handguns in this country.

Winner of the spot news photography award was Larry Price of the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram, for photographs from Liberia, including exclusive pictures of a firing squad executing 13 people.

The feature photography prize was awarded to Taro Yamasaki of the Detroit Free Press for photographs taken inside the State Prison of Southern Michigan recording the living conditions of inmates.

Dave Anderson, a sports columnist for The New York Times, was honored with the prize for distinguished commentary, based on his coverage and comment on most of the great names in sports.

Quebec chooses new legislature

MONTREAL — The people of Quebec voted for a new provincial legislature Monday, choosing between Premier Rene Levesque's French separatists, who have temporarily put aside the independence question, and an opposition party that asked voters to bury the issue forever.

Pre-election opinion polls pointed to a victory for Levesque and the Parti Quebecois over the opposition Liberals, who are led by former newspaper editor Claude Ryan.

The PQ, which has governed the French-speaking Canadian province for 4½ years, lost a referendum on separatism last year.

Quebecers were voting for a new 122-seat National Assembly, as the provincial legislature is called. The party winning the most seats forms the new government.

In the previous, 110-member Assembly, dissolved March 12 as the PQ government neared the end of its maximum five-year mandate, the separatist party held 67 seats, the Liberals 34, the conservative Union Nationale 5 and independents 2. Two seats were vacant. The new assembly has 12 new seats.

During the campaign Ryan told Quebecers they should throw out the PQ government in order to "finish the job" begun last May, when they rejected Levesque's plans for independence in the referendum.

The social-democratic PQ was founded in 1968 and first gained power in elections in November 1976, defeating a scandal-ridden Liberal government.

Reagan's wife stays by his side

WASHINGTON — She brought him a robe and slippers. She brought him jellybeans, and hamburger soup, and brownies and messages from friends and get-well posters from children.

She flirted with him, inviting him for a "disco date" and then leading him down the hospital corridor for dinner in her sitting room. She cried with him when they read a telegram from old friend

Jimmy Stewart: "I would have taken that bullet."

During the 12 days he was hospitalized with a bullet wound in his left lung, Nancy Reagan canceled virtually every task as the nation's first lady—and concentrated purely on being the president's. But she has always said her overriding duty, simply, is "to be with him."

Since the March 30 attempt on her husband's life, Nancy Reagan is said to have whirled through a cycle of emotions.

In the first harrowing hours, she was frightened but determined to remain controlled and, as she put it to Time magazine, "not be a bother to anybody." The tears came later, after the reality struck that someone had wanted her husband dead. Friends say she was torn, too, by guilt that she had not been with him. She lost her appetite and had trouble sleeping.

Haig honors former hostages

WASHINGTON — The American diplomats formerly held hostage in Iran were cited Monday for exceptional bravery and heard Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. vow "to stamp out the scourge of international terrorism."

In the presence of a U.S. Marine band, Haig pinned the State Department's Award for Valor on the lapel of L. Bruce Laingen, the ranking U.S. diplomat in Iran during the 444-day hostage crisis.

Laingen received the award on behalf of himself and 53 other returnees before an overflow crowd at the State Department's Dean Acheson auditorium. Thirty-four of the former captives were present for the ceremony.

'Tonight Show' first victim of strike

HOLLYWOOD — The three-day strike by film and television writers claimed its first victim Monday when NBC-TV officials announced that "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" will broadcast reruns indefinitely.

The announcement, made just before the show's usual 5:30 p.m. PST taping at NBC's Burbank studio, came after the first day of picketing by members of the Writers Guild of America across town at 20th Century-Fox studios.

"Tonight Show" spokesman Joe Bleeden, noting that the show normally has seven to nine writers, said he didn't see any of them report for work Monday. He did not know if Carson himself had a hand in the decision not to go on without writers.

With everything pointing to a protracted strike, hundreds of demonstrators peacefully picketed outside 20th Century-Fox studios to express their dismay over what they termed an embarrassingly low contract offer from film and TV producers.

Scholarship cuts unjustified

The Kansas Senate voted Wednesday to cut back funding for a scholarship progam for students at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Two types of scholarships are available, both based on an agreement by the student to practice medicine in a certain area of Kansas: One pays for tuition, and the other for tuition plus $500 a month. There is also a provision that allows the student to pay back the scholarship with interest instead of practicing in Kansas.

As it stands, the bill would limit the number of scholarships per class to 100, and would raise the interest rate for those choosing to pay back the scholarships from 10 percent to 12 percent. Also, it would further restrict the areas where the student can serve in Kansas.

Medical students have been hit hard in the past two years on both state and federal levels. A popular argument has been that, according to Health and Human Services (HHS) estimates, the country is headed for a dramatic doctor "glut" in the next few years. And hence, bureaucrats trying to look good in their budget cutting sprees find funding for medical schools and students an easy target.

First, HHS' figures are questionable, at best. Second, there is nothing wrong with a doctor "glut." In fact, although medical educations cost the tax-payers, more competition might have some positive effects on medical costs in the long-run.

Third, cutting back funding for scholarships will cut back the number of students in medical school who can't afford it—not the number of medical students. Medicine will have its ranks filled with richer and richer physicians.

Governor Carlin's change of heart

As usual, the 1981 Kansas Legislature sent Governor Carlin a death penalty bill for his signature—as they have in past sessions.

As usual, Carlin vetoed the measure, as he has in past sessions, despite campaigning for the death penalty in 1978.

It would be easy to criticize Carlin for not signing the bill.

But the Legislature is the one at fault. The body faced too many other important issues to waste time with a bill they knew would be vetoed.

Simply because Carlin campaigned for the death penalty is no reason to throw it in his face each year.

It was apparent soon after Carlin took office that he had changed his view on the death penalty, a move that is often difficult to understand and politically unpopular.

But the public must allow political leaders to alter their views on issues—so long as they do not do so to an excess.

'My Fair Lady' praised

Editor,

I would like to commend the K-State Players and the Departments of Speech and Music for a job well done on this past weekend's production of "My Fair Lady." I had the privilege of attending the show Saturday evening and truly enjoyed the performance of Ida Quick as Eliza Doolittle. I was also quite impressed by the superb quality of the chorus. Often, in shows of this type, chorus parts receive little attention and lack polish, however in this show the chorus was brilliant and really helped make the production a splendid success.

My heartiest congratulations to you all.

Women deserve praise

The recent controversy over the march initiated by the organization, "Women Against Rape" (WAR) served to raise a number of rather interesting and incorrect perceptions.

The brouhaha began with a scathing column condemning the organizers for their supposed animosity toward the press and their refusal to allow the participation of males in the meetings that were held prior to the actual march.

The article also made allusion to the perception that WAR was, in some way, insensitive to the male desire to be involved in making a political statement about rape. The women involved were termed "paranoid idiots" who were likely to "engender hostility" instead of serving a useful purpose.

After taking the time to call a few of the participants in the organization and reading the subsequent press story about the march, I believe it is time to respond to the entire affair.

The prevailing attitude on the subject of rape is chock-full of innuendos, sexist misconceptions and blame. An acceptance of the idea that a woman would actively engage in the desire to be raped is quite prevalent in many people.

women are constantly warned to take preventative measures to insure against the possibility of rape. The mode of dress affected by women is said to be one of the causative factors of rape. The manner in which a woman conveys her femininity is cited as another reason for rape. In other words, "If you don't want to be raped, don't act like a whore." A woman is warned to stay away from areas that seem to exude an atmosphere ripe for a sexual assault.

All of these myths are perpetuated because of the refusal of most in society to accept the fact that rape is a way of expressing a power statement through the use of a sexual act. It is not desire that leads to rape. It is the impotent expression of anger, hatred and lack of acceptance of the notion that women are indeed of worth, importance and power, that leads to the act of rape.

The refusal of society to accept that, the stereotypical attributes and ideas it imposes on women, continues to be a thorn in the side of women who actively seek to take back their unquestionable right to their own bodies.

and women express the idea that it is necessary for females to become a nondescript blob after the sun goes down. Supposedly, it is up to the woman to negate the craven desires of the masses to insure her own personal safety. It is a ridiculous premise, to put it mildly.

Thus, through the "Take Back the Night" march, we finally saw a vocal and visual demonstration that women will no longer allow their freedom of movement and visibility to be denied. The march was a way to make the statement that women are not powerless. It made the statement that women are no longer afraid to confront the problem and deal with it aggressively. It is about time.

Women are too often afraid to report a sexual assault. Some have come to accept the smarmy, lewd comments of others, usually male, that seem to accompany the day-to-day activities of females in this society, as an annoyance that must be tolerated. It is a truly damning positon to accept.

How often does one hear of a male being afraid to walk along a street at night because he fears being raped? Countless articles have been written and many statements made about men who are raped in prisons. Sodomy is considered such a heinous crime that it illicits the outrage of thousands. How many times does one hear a male make the cutsey statement, "Relax and enjoy it?"

THE WOMEN WHO marched on Saturday deserve kudos and admiration. By demonstrating their solidarity, the belief in the right of women to be in control of their bodies without fear of assault and derision was well conveyed. As I saw them carrying their signs through Aggieville, I could feel nothing but respect and love for our femaleness. It takes a great deal of courage to tell all who will listen that enough is enough-that only through perseverance can we try to take back the night. Women can be and are quite powerful.

Accusations of infiltration prompt FBI check Weaponry: on The Way's military training programs spokesman for The Way International, a religious group which has received publicity for its weapons training classes, said an FBI investigation to see if the organization has infiltrated two Chrysler Corp. Midwestern defense plants is nothing more than deliberate harassment.

"I think its kind of stretching the point," said Way spokesman Lonnell Johnson. There may be followers of The Way at the plants, "but more Roman Catholics are probably working there and they are not being accused of infiltrating," according to Johnson.

A Chrysler official was quoted by the Chicago Sun-Times this week as saying the FBI has been called in to check whether The Way followers are working at plants in Warren, Mich., and Lima, Ohio.

JOHNSON SAID THE investigation is

He blamed the media "for blowing out of proportion" a hunting and safety course that was offered at The Way College of Emporia. The course has been dropped from the curriculum and The Way is not a paramilitary organization, Johnson said.

The investigation reportedly started late last year when a civilian Army employee reported that members of The Way evidently had obtained jobs, some in sensitive positions, at the plants, which produce and test M-60 and M-1 (formerly XM-1)

THE FBI DECLINED to confirm or deny the investigation was under way. But the Sun-Times quoted the Chrysler official as saying, "It's strictly in the hands of the FBI

The FBI is now looking at information which claims The Way conducts regular weapons training in locations including Emporia and Gunison, Colo. A former member is quoted as saying the training was in preparation "to go underground and fight for our beliefs if Satan takes over the government."

The Way is led by Victor Weirwille, a 64year-old former fundamentalist minister. The Way keeps no membership records, Johnson said, but estimates of the group are at 100,000.

ASK opposes tuition increase, tells regents through postcards

K-State students are preparing postcards to Kansas Board of Regents members with messages of opposition to the proposed tuition increase.

The Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) has announced its opposition to any tuition increase exceeding 15 percent. In support of the ASK stand, University students are composing their words of antagonism at a table set up in the first floor concourse of the

In an effort to shift some of the burden in paying for higher education costs, the Kansas Senate approved a 15 percent tuition increase which will be studied by the regents Thursday and Friday. There have been other proposals in the Legislature to raise that figure even higher.

K-State members of ASK are manning the table with postcards and information about the current tuition increase proposals. Students are given a chance to write their reactions to the possible tuition hike and have the postcards delivered to the regents by a University representative in their scheduled meetings Thursday and Friday.

"Most of them are saying they're opposed to the tuition increase," said Steve Linenberger, K-State campus director for ASK. "There's been a lot of concern from married students and veteran students that are really on a tight budget."

This is an attempt for K-State students to "mobilize their grass roots support," Linenberger said. "Students aren't just passive consumers."

With the postcards as verification of disapproval from students at K-State, Linenberger said he hopes the regents will make recommendations to the governor calling for no tuition increase above 15

"Regents can make a recommendation to the governor saying 'Governor Carlin, we are opposed to this increase and the students of Kansas have told us so',"Linenberger said. "We're trying to get influence on our

Pair traveled down path to self-destruction

CAMBRIDGE, Ill. (AP) — They disappeared sometime after daybreak, leaving a stack of love letters and their last chance behind them.

He was a doctor, a one-time honor student and Air Force flight surgeon with impeccable credentials. She once taught Sunday school.

Roger and Sharon Ihrig were young, bright and full of promise. And now they were on the run, again.

"The technical term is folie a deux," French for 'madness of two,' said psychologist Rip O'Keefe, director of the drug center the Ihrigs fled March 18. "You have two people who individually are marginal at best and who together bring out the worst in each other."

THEIR ROAD to self-destruction began about 1979—failed marriages, failed jobs, alcohol, drugs and finally "a string of motel rooms with bloody sheets and used syringes left behind," police said.

The road led to Galva, a little farm town where, last November, police arrested Sharon in a dime store for shoplifting chocolate bars and a black blouse. In her car, police found a rainbow of capsules and bottles of prescription drugs, including injectable Valium.

When Roger learned his wife had been arrested, he filled a syringe with Benadryl, stuck the needle in his arm and then walked to the police station. "He was dressed in a sports coat, white shirt and tie that looked like they had been slept in for days," police said.

WHEN HE slipped off his jacket, everyone in the station saw that Dr. Roger

Two wrongs made a worse

Ihrig's right shirtsleeve was soaked with fresh blood.

"I look at all the potential he had," said his lawyer, Dale Haake of Rock Island. "Somewhere, something happened."

Exactly what happened is not clear. But the picture emerging from police and military records and reports from former colleagues is of an attractive, gifted young man who had everything, and lost it all.

Ihrig was born 31 years ago, the son of a wheat farmer in the small northwest Kansas community of Goodland, where the earth lies as flat as a billiard table. He earned his medical degree from the University of Kansas in 1974 and served his internship in the Air Force at Alamogordo, N.M.

"I've seen his Air Force records, 120 pages," Haake said. "He stepped into responsible positions that in the past had three or four physicians, and he would do the job all by himself. And at the same time he would improve efficiency, improve patient relations and get nothing but outstanding comments."

SIX FEET TALL, with sandy-colored hair, he jogged for health and read mysteries for fun. He joined the Elks and the Masons.

But about 1979, it all began to fall apart. His seven-year marriage soured and by Christmas, occasional injections of Benadryl, an antihistamine with sedative side effects, on sleepless nights had become a twice-a-day habit, police say he told them.

He tried to start a private practice. He failed. He went to San Diego and joined the Navy. He was divorced. His wife got custody of their two sons. Shortly after that, he married Sharon Espinosa, 22, twice-married and someone who "gives me strength," he told police.

When he injected Benadryl, she injected Valium or a hypnotic pain killer, Stadol. They loved each other, fed off each other and were destroying each other.

"This is a very tragic situation where a couple of clearly dependent sick people are using each other to stay ill," O'Keefe said. Ihrig ended his Navy career with five weeks at a military drug treatment center in Long Beach, Calif.

AFTER HIS DISCHARGE last August, he and Sharon searched for a practice. In Vaughn, N.M., a bank refused a loan. Returning to Kansas, he was forced to close his Hoisington office after one week. In Flagstaff, Ariz., police found blood-stained pillows and used syringes scattered about a motel room, blood smeared on the TV screen.

The year before, Ihrig had made a good impression on visits to clinics in Illinois. Nobody wanted to hire him now.

"I would have had no way to recognize him on the basis of our first meeting a few months before," Cottage Hospital vice president David Fleming said of his encounter with Ihrig Nov. 6. "His complexion was blotchy. He was bloated. He had a strange look in his eye and was perspiring profusely."

The next day, the Ihrigs were in Galva, charged with violating drug laws, which carries a penalty of one to three years. Authorities released them on bond. They ran. Canadian border guards returned them to Illinois where they pleaded guilty and were locked up in the squat, red brick Henry County Jail.

FROM HIS CELL, Ihrig wrote to Judge Jay Hanson, acknowledging he needed treatment, saying he wanted to straighten out his life, suggesting he might enter a seminary. In March, after four months in jail, they were released to the custody of Riverside Retreat, a drug rehabilitation center in Rock Island.

Sometime after daybreak, they were gone. Left behind were love letters, written daily from their separate cells, filled with innocent expressions. "High school stuff," said State's Attorney Jeff O'Connor. "Adolescent."

They profess undying love with arrows drawn through the letter "o." They have hearts and kisses and the assurance—each to the other—that everything was bright and wonderful and would be all right once they were together again.

On March 30, police arrested Roger and Sharon Ihrig in New Mexico for probation violation. They are being held in separate cells as they fight extradition to Illinois, where this time each will likely face the full sentence for the original drug convictions.

Allegations baffle commissioner but Big 8 will still assist FBI

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — FBI officials confirmed Monday they are investigating "the validity" of information received about possible irregularities in certain Big 8 basketball games, and the Big 8 commissioner said the conference office "will cooperate fully."

However, Commissioner Carl James told the Associated Press the conference still does not know specifically "what the allegations are."

Newspaper reports this past weekend said the FBI was looking into allegations that gamblers may have influenced three lateseason games, Kansas at Missouri, Nebraska at Missouri and Oklahoma State at Colorado. The newspaper reports quoted unnamed sources as saying unusually large amounts of money were bet on those games.

A STATEMENT BY the FBI said:

"Floyd I. Clarke, special agent in charge of the Kansas City office of the FBI, advised that the FBI has received information indicating possible irregularities in certain Big 8 conference basketball games during this past season. An investigation is being conducted by the FBI to ascertain the validity of that information."

The FBI statement did not mention any specific games and Clarke could not be reached for further comment.

"The Big 8 conference will cooperate fully with the FBI investigation," James said in a prepared release. "It is our desire to settle this matter as quickly as possible. At this point, the conference is awaiting further word from the FBI concerning its activities. The conference hopes to maintain communication in order to facilitate full cooperation and insure swift resolution of the situation."

IN AN INTERVIEW with the Associated Press, James said the FBI's statement "seems very guarded."

"They're talking about possible irregularities," James said. "And that's an accurate position, from all we know. I appreciate the fact they're going to investigate to see if there are grounds for investigation. We hope they will look upon us as a source of assistance in their investigation. But to my knowledge, I don't believe they have contacted any of our coaches, players or game officials. And they have not looked at any game film."

James said he contacted FBI officials in Kansas City Monday.

"I called them and said, 'What's going on," James said. "Mr. Clarke said he was going to make a statement, and I said fine, just let us know if we can assist. I pledged to them our full support."

David Cawood, director of public relations for the NCAA, said the National Association of Basketball Coaches would recommend to the NCAA a panel of coaches to study films of the games for any irregularities.

Guard Sherrod rejects K-State, joins Dreiling at Wichita State

WICHITA (AP) — Aubrey Sherrod, holder of the Wichita City League scoring title, signed a letter of intent Monday to play basketball for Wichita State University.

The 6-4 guard for Wichita Heights was swayed toward WSU because he wanted to continue to play before a hometown crowd, he said. Sherrod played in a national prep all-star game at WSU's Henry Levitt Arena Saturday night and said he loved the ovation be got

He had narrowed his choices to Wichita State and K-State several weeks ago. Last week, WSU signed another outstanding Wichita prep player, Kapaun-Mt. Carmel's center Greg Dreiling. Sherrod said he is looking forward to playing with Dreiling instead of against him.

"I like to play with a big man because I don't have to worry about any rebounds any more," he said. " I can just go out and ness."

Sherrod holds the City League scoring title for players who played three years. He averaged 27.5 points per game and ended his prep career with 1,739 points.

Kings' slowed-down playing style befuddles, frustrates Phoenix

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The Kansas City Kings know they can apply the finishing blow to the Phoenix Suns Wednesday night in Game Five of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association playoff series.

And they look like they're ready to do it.

The Kings hold a commanding 3-1 edge in the Western Conference semifinal series by virtue of winning the last three games in a row. The string started last Wednesday night when Kansas City took a 88-83 decision at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum—the Kings first-ever post-season win there.

"It won't be our last, either," Kansas City forward Reggie King boasted after that game. "The momentum is going our way now. We got their number."

Yet it's the Kings' numbers that have Phoenix's players scratching ther collective heads.

"They only have seven or eight guys. It's hard to figure out how they're beating us," said Suns' guard Dennis Johnson.

Playing without injured guards Phil Ford and Otis Birdsong, Kansas City has reverted to a slow-down attack which has befuddled and frustrated the fast-break-bred Phoenix offense.

"I don't think they like playing our style of game," King said. "They won 57 games running and gunning. Any team would have trouble adjusting its style."

But even after defeats of 93-92 and 102-95 at Kansas City's Kemper Arena, Suns' Coach John MacLeod said his team won't make any major alterations Wednesday night

"We didn't plan to be down 3-1 but we've still got the people who can pull this thing out," he said. "Basically, we'll go with the same people. The only thing we'll do better is shoot, rebound and run."

Veteran power forward Len "Truck" Robinson typifies Phoenix's problems. Averaging 18.8 points-per-game during the regular season, the Suns' team captain was held to 10 points in Game One, two in Game Two and seven in the third game before busting out for 23 points in Game Four on Sunday.

"The shots are there," he said. "I just haven't been able to hit them. Nobody is shooting consistently well. We just aren't jelling."

As a team, the Suns haven't shot better than 50 percent from the floor in any of the playoff games against Kansas City.

"We've never missed open shots and free throws like this," said Phoenix guard Walter Davis. "The Kings are just playing their regular game. We're not. Their tempo rules us. We have to change."

The Kings have won five of seven playoff games this season by limiting their opponents to less than 100 points—including the past three encounters with Phoenix.

Paralyzed kicker Little rests future with God

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) - Doctors will release former St. Louis Cardinals place kicker Steve Little from Central Baptist Hospital soon, saying any further recovery in his near-total paralysis will take years.

"I leave it up to God now," Little, a graduate of Shawnee Mission South High in Kansas City, said. "If he wants me to walk, I'll walk. The Bible says, 'All things are possible with the Lord'."

Little was paralyzed from the neck down when his sports car skidded off a rain-slick highway in St. Louis County and crashed into a sign post. The October accident came on the night Little was cut by the Cardinals after losing a kick-off to Neil O'Donoghue for the team place kicking job.

Louis inspired aspiring boxers

DETROIT (AP) - Joe Louis was just a face on a faded magazine page or a flickering figure on an old piece of film, but he nonetheless inspired hundreds of young boxers who are trying to punch their way out of Detroit's inner city—just like the "Brown Bomber" did.

They still work out every evening at Wheeling Recreation Center in the Brewster Project, located in the old neighborhood where Louis grew up and trained as a young

However, the best fighters in Detroit now come out of the Kronk Gym-across town-in the steamy basement of a former elementary school. That's where Thomas Hearns, the World Boxing Association welterweight champion, trains.

Kronk is where all the hopeful young amateur boxers come to learn and dream of escape.

There, on a gray, rainy Monday afternoon, the day after Louis died, young boxers-and some not so young-already were taping their hands and limbering up at 2:30 p.m.

"Joe was my hero," said Karl Vinson, 26, a middleweight. "I used to watch 'Greatest Fights of the Century' on television, and I remember watching him beat Max Schmeling.

"I started reading up on him, and it was kind of inspirational. I said, 'If he can do it, I

"Boxing is a way out of here, a way to a better life. It worked for him and I think it can work for me."

Vinson's 15-year-old brother, Jakrta Nakuru, a sophomore at Detroit Cooley High School, also feels touched by the Louis legacy.

"I hear things about him," Nakuru said, lacing up his high-top white boxing shoes. "They say Joe Louis was a great boxer, but he had some financial difficulties. He wasn't "That inspires me to stay in school so that if I have a lot of money, I'll know what to do

Gary Borden, 21, a 147-pounder with a 5-1 amateur record, has been in and out of trouble, out on city streets.

"At first I wondered who Joe Louis was, so I looked some stuff up on him," Borden said. "What I learned meant a lot to me. He showed me that there were other things we could do besides be out in the streets, as far as stealing and things.

Wildcat netters at home today

With a chance to regain its pride after being polished off by Oklahoma State, Colorado and Kansas in its own tournament last weekend, the K-State men's tennis team will return to action today at the Washburn Complex.

The Wildcats will host Creighton at 11 a.m. and Missouri Western at 2 p.m.

"I don't think we'll have any trouble in this one," coach Steve Snodgrass said. "We'll have to play tennis, though. We won't be able to just walk on the court and win."

The probable K-State lineup will have Jeff Henderson in No. 1 singles, Steve Webb at the No. 2 spot and Matt Westfall at No. 3. Dan Forrester, Dave Krizman and Mike Goss will play in the No. 4 through 6 positions, respectively.

Doubles action will pair Henderson and Krizman up at No. 1; Forrester and Goss will play in the No. 2 spot; with No. 3 being played by Webb and Westfall.

Designers to aid merchants with planning

By RHONDA SHIDELER

As part of the overall downtown redevelopment, the Downtown Design Project will be used to enhance the "streetscape" along Poyntz Avenue outside the proposed mall area.

The project is being financed with a $30,000 matching grant from the National Endowment for Arts. The matching money is being put up by the city, Downtown Manhattan Inc., and the College of Architecture and Design at K-State, according to Tom Keohan, full-time coordinator for the Downtown Design Project.

The grant was awarded to Manhattan in January and work on the project officially started at the beginning of February.

THREE PHASES which make up the design project include streetscape design, facade improvements and a plaza design, Keohan said.

The Downtown Design Project deals with design improvements for existing arrangements outside the area of the proposed mall from Third Street to Juliette Avenue on Poyntz Avenue.

The streetscape can be explained, Keohan said, by imagining the street as a large outside room; the building facades as the walls of the room, the street and sidewalks as the floor, and the ceiling as the sky. The streetscape includes the room and

The designers will help the merchants along Poyntz redesign their storefronts in the most affordable way, Keohan said.

"We're providing design assistance to them that includes graphic signs, the store facade...and how each building relates to one another and how they totally represent one package.'

The merchants will provide funding for their own storefronts, Keohan said, but the design project will facilitate low interest loans through area banks for the merchants.

THE PLAZA, which will be located at 3rd and Poyntz, will serve as the pedestrian entrance to the proposed mall, Keohan said. He said members of the design project are working with the developer on the design of the proposed mall.

According to the designers, the plaza may serve as a place for community activities, public gatherings, dances, lounging, or art

Definite designs for the project will not be made until guidelines are agreed upon by merchants and citizens involved with the project's series of workshops, Keohan said.

"In the Downtown Design Project, before we can do any designs, or before we can do any drawings, we are setting up a set of guidelines developed by citizen input and developed by merchant input," Keohan

Carlin prohibits 'blind bidding,' approves safety seat regulation

TOPEKA (AP) - A bill outlawing the socalled "blind bidding" for motion picture rentals was signed into law on Monday by Gov. John Carlin.

With the action, Kansas becomes the 22nd state since 1978 to ban the practice, which requires theater owners to agree to show a new movie before they have seen it, sometimes even before the film is completed.

Also signed were bills providing more than $532,000 in tax credits to Kansas oil producers over the next three years, requiring Kansas parents to use car safety seats for their children under two years of age, and prohibiting the retail sale of metal beverage cans with detachable opening

THE PROPOSALS were among about two dozen signed by Carlin, as he opened the first full week of a two-week legislative recess before lawamakers return for a brief wrap-up session beginning April 29.

About 75 percent of Kansas' 196 theaters book movies using the practice of blind bidding. Before 1975, the U.S. Justice Department regulated the practice, and permitted movie distributors to blind-bid almost all of their films instead of only a few

The bill, which has failed to clear the Legislature for the last three years, would mean that all movies must be screened by buyers before they could be shown in Kansas. However, it does not set penalties for violations of the law.

Carlin had wrestled with the proposal for several days, and finally gave his approval in early Monday evening after hours of deliberations and long after most state offices had closed.

AS INDICATIVE of the bill's importance to the movie industry was a visit last Thursday to Topeka by Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, to talk with Carlin.

The movie distributor official opposed the law saying those who produce movies must obtain contracts to show the films even before they are finished in order to generate money for its production.

The oil measure broadens an existing tax credit given for tertiary oil recovery to provide the deductions for all "enhanced recovery methods," generally a process used to pump the thickest oil from a well. The credit would mean a loss in state corporate and individual tax revenue of about $86,000 in the next fiscal year, increasing to nearly $290,000 in fiscal 1984.

SUPPORTERS OF the proposal said it would encourage increased oil production in

The car seat bill is designed to reduce the number of deaths and crippling injuries to small children involved in automobile accidents. It would mandate the use of a properly approved "child safety restraining system," but applies only to Kansans and violations of the law carry only a oral

Among the other measures signed were ones which would:

-Protect a farmer's grain stored in an elevator in case it went bankrupt. The bill mandates that the owner of grain in storage has the first right to the grain against all other liens other than for payment of fees for the storage. The measure was prompted by a legal dispute in southeastern Missouri elevator. -Allow the seller of a house to pay some of the legal fees in a real estate transaction, such as closing costs. The bill removes a prohibition on such actions.

Allergy time: Elevated pollen count causes congestion; sneezing, stuffy nose are signs of Spring

By TANYA BRANSON Collegian Reporter

Sneezing, stuffy noses and congestion are just as much a part of spring for allergy victims as softball, sun and picnics are for

Allergies may make the spring unpleasant for 20 percent of the population, said Dr. Daniel Martin, of Lafene Student Health

The allergy clinic at Lafene has seen an increased number of students with allergies lately, Martin said.

"This season is worse for allergies because of the relatively mild winter," Gail Schmedemann, registered nurse at Lafene, said. "It warmed up so soon, it's pollinating more. It's so dry and dusty and the wind we've been having has kept pollen blowing. It's an early and bad spring as far as allergies go.'

FOR THOSE affected by allergies, the spring can be somewhat uncomfortable.

"I just sneeze, blow my nose and spit," Steve Meier, freshman in pre-design professions, said. "Sometimes I take Contact."

"The last couple of days I've noticed it," Ron Peine, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "I didn't know the pollen lately."

One of the things Martin recommends for treating allergies are antistamines.

"Antihistamines are worth a try," Martin said. "They are sold over the counter and are pretty much the same. If you've tried one, you've tried them all."

If these don't work then Lafene has some prescriptions that are chemically different than those sold over the counter.

"It's a trial-and-error process," Martin said. "There is no way to test and determine which one works for a person. If one doesn't work then try the next one, and the next."

There is nothing a person with allergies can do to prevent the symptoms. The only thing is to "go on a long ocean voyage, Martin said.

THE POLLEN COUNT was the highest it's been at the Menorah Medical Center in Kansas City, Mo., since the center started taking daily counts last July, said Jonathon Hyde, public relations assistant at Menorah. The pollen count was 3,500 Friday, but down to 2,002 Monday.

A pollen count is the actual number of pollen grains in the air. It is measured by a rotorod-two glass rods greased and spun in count was up, but I have been sneezing a lot the air for 15 minutes. A sample is taken, dyed and the grains are counted under a microscope, Hyde said.

An equation formulated by agronomists at K-State is then used to figure the number of pollen grains in a cubic meter of air. The formula takes into account the kind of trees, types of plants and how much they pollinated in the Kansas City area, Hyde

Every location has a different formula becase the areas have different plants, Hyde said. A pollen count isn't taken in Manhattan, Schmedemann said.

Britain investigates racial violence; leaders encourage demonstrations

LONDON (AP) - Home Secretary William Whitelaw on Monday announced a major government inquiry into Britain's worst racial violence-weekend riots in south London that left 200 people injured and sparked renewed calls in Parliament for an end to non-white immigration.

Radical community leaders in the racially mixed Brixton district formed a "Brixton Defense Committee" and urged non-whites throughout Britain to rally in the district Sunday to support the 199 people arrested in clashes with police Saturday and Sunday.

Whitelaw, who announced the investigation in a House of Commons speech, vowed to "maintain the law" and said he would not bow to demands by blacks that police reinforcements be pulled out of Brixton.

Whitelaw said the government investigation will be headed by Lord Scarman, a leading judge and human rights reformer who has headed tribunals on violence in Northern Ireland and labor confrontations in Britain.

The weekend street battles in an area populated largely by West Indian immigrants, were the worst racial violence since non-white immigration from Britain's former colonies began in 1948.

A police helicopter hovered over Brixton's debris-strewn streets—quiet early Monday night apart from the sounds of workmen repairing or boarding up shop fronts of 120 damaged buildings. British newspapers compared the devastation with that done by Nazi bombers during the Blitz of World War

Police, accused by community leaders of sparking the violence through "heavyhanded tactics," patroled in pairs, while truck loads of reinforcements kept to side streets of the racially mixed district.

Damage was estimated at about $2.2 million, much of it from fire that spread when firemen were turned away by the rampaging mobs which also attacked ambulances. Scotland Yard said 146 police were injured.

Right-winger Enoch Powell, a member of Parliament who last month predicted racial "civil war" in Britain, declared Monday: "In view of the prospective future increase in the relevant (non-white) population, you have seen nothing yet." Powell is a member of the Official Unionist Party, one of several Northern Ireland Protestant parties.

Shuttle ends space flight successfully

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) - Space shuttle Columbia brilliantly wound up its first trial by spaceflight Tuesday, sailing through the heat of re-entry to a perfect wheels-down landing on a sunbaked desert runway.

The moment of triumph belonged to astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen, who inaugurated a revolutionary space transportation system with a flight lasting 2 days, 61/2 hours.

"What a way to come to California," said Crippen.

"Do we have to take it to the hangar, Joe?" asked Young after the ship came to a stop.

"We have to dust it off first," replied Shuttle Control's Joe Allen.

The astronauts came out of a 15minute communications blackout, the most danger-filled time, with a tension-breaking message for the shuttle team: "Hello Houston, Columbia here."

Down, down, the Columbia went, dipping first to one side, then another. From a hypersonic speed in space it went to supersonic and then to subsonic.

Two sonic booms exploded over Rogers Dry Lake.

"Looking beautiful," Allen said.

The ship rolled to a stop on the Rogers Dry Lake runway on the Mojave Desert at 1:22 p.m. EST, right on the runway centerline. It had been aloft exactly 2 days, 6 hours, 20 minutes and 52 seconds.

"Welcome home Columbia." said Allen. "Beautiful. Beautiful." From President Reagan in Washington, came these words: "Congratulations on a job well done."

From Johnson Space Center director Christopher Kraft, who hopes to send Columbia up for test flight No. 2 in September, "We just got infinitely smarter."

The astronauts had to remain inside for about 45 minutes while the ship's remaining deadly fuels were cleared out and the hatch opened, the first recovery crew came away with a good report-no problems.

Enormous crowds, estimated at 170,000, came in cars and campers to watch the completion of the longheralded and long-delayed trial flight. The desert was bathed in a brilliant mid-morning sun. Chase planes were aloft to escort the shuttle in and to photograph it.

Columbia went aloft Sunday on a white hot tower of flame and performed nearly flawlessly during its shakedown cruise. Crippen quickly dubbed her "a champ."

"We want her back in the hangar," Allen, an astronaut, told the astronauts as they began their 36th-and last-turn around Earth. Over the Indian Ocean, an hour before touchdown, Young and Crippen fired the engine to start the ship on its descent.

All communication between spacecraft and ground stopped for 15 minutes as an ion fence formed around Columbia.

Columbia came into the at-

Carlin launches statewide tour, seeks support

By MARK ATZENHOFFER finish the 1981 session. Agriculture Editor

Shortly after vetoing the Legislature's school finance bill, Gov. John Carlin was in Manhattan Tuesday to begin a tour that will take him around the state during the next two weeks to drum up support for a severance tax.

Under the school finance bill, property taxes would have been people of Kansas, Carlin said, which has helped increase support for a severance tax. "The issue of school finance highlighted the need for the severance tax," he said.

There is growing understanding of the issue of school finance by the

CARLIN SAID that at the beginning of the legislative session there was agreement that two basic needs were school finance and highways. The severance tax was proposed in an effort to divert attention from concerning the proposed tuition a proposal at the beginning of the session to increase the state sales tax as a means to raise additional money for schools and highways, Carlin said. At the end of the session, the Legislature came up with a $53 million statewide property tax increase as a solution, he said.

"It was with that movement (toward a severance tax) that a number of other movements developed," Carlin said. "The Legislature began backing away from the need. The proposal raised a number of responses that would not have been there had I not raised the severance tax issue."

REPUBLICAN LEADERS in the Senate proposed cutting oudgets as a way to avoid a tax increase, Carlin said. He said it was a reaction to federal budget cutting.

But none of the budget cuts would keep property taxes from increasing next year or in the years to come, he said.

"Until the issue is faced, it's going to be difficult."

He said that as a result of budget cutting in Washington the state must exert a stronger role in financing its programs.

"It is going to be critical for the states to work with the schools, cities and counties to best respond to what's happening in Washington," Carlin said. "We can't do that by arbitrarily cutting, ignoring the needs that are there education, highways or other vital services needed."

ASKED ABOUT a compromise for the severance tax, Carlin said one has already been reached.

In his original proposal, he asked for an 8 percent tax on the oil and gas industry. The House reduced the proposal to 5 percent which Carlin said was "reasonable."

He stressed that 90 Kansas counties are involved in oil or gas production, but pointed out that a great part of some communities are not involved in the industry. He said there is support for the tax in these communities.

"The needs are real all across the state—the property tax situation; the highway needs—the program to meet those needs is also a statewide program."

He said a 5 percent severance tax along with the current property tax on mineral production would be in line with other states.

IN RESPONSE to a question increase for the state's regents' institutions, Carlin said it was was "ill-timed." The Senate voted to request that the Board of Regents increase tuition by 15 percent next year at its schools.

"The Legislature's striking out looking for money was part of the package to avoid the severance tax," he said. "Tuition increases were not based on a careful evaluation as to whether this was the appropriate time in light of what other events were taking place. It was strictly a search for money." He said he was disappointed in the Senate's action.

It was made at a time when cuts in federal funding for loan and grant programs were being proposed, which should be taken into consideration, Carlin said.

"This doesn't mean tuition shouldn't be adjusted."

Students should carry a certain part of the responsibility in paying for their eduction, Carlin said, but what is an appropriate part is always debatable.

He said his main concern was the quick action, the timing of it, and lack of thought of its appropriateness.

allowed to increase $53 million statewide next year, an increase Carlin called "unacceptable." With his severance tax proposal, Carlin said an increase in property taxes would have been averted.

The severance tax and school finance are tied together for funding reasons, Carlin said at a press conference in the Union.

"School finance is an issue every year, sometimes just for distribution reasons, sometimes for technical reasons," Carlin said. "But as much as anything, this year for funding reasons. Where are the dollars going to come from?"

CARLIN SAID the severance tax on mineral production would raise $111 million-80 percent of which would be borne by out-of-state sources. It is the best alternative, Carlin said, because it would provide new money for school finance and reduce property taxes. Although a severance tax was passed by the House, it was killed late in the session in the Senate Assessment and Taxation Com-

Columbia came into the atmosphere nose up to shift the brunt of the 2,750 degree heat to the tiles on its belly. Free and weightless in space, Columbia now became an 80-ton glider—the biggest ever flown.

Atlanta officials still perplexed, urge FBI director to hush up

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta officials said Tuesday they have not solved any of the 23 slayings of young blacks and urged FBI Director William Webster to stop making "casual press statements" suggesting a break may be near.

"The question is, have we solved the cases? The answer is no. We know more about some than others, but we do not have sufficient evidence to indict," Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said.

Webster was quoted in Tuesday's Atlanta Constitution as saying there is a suspect in 12 to 16 cases of the cases, and three or four other cases not connected either to each other or the others have been "substantially solved."

Mayor Maynard Jackson told Webster in a letter: "Your statements undermine the public's confidence in our investigation and create a great deal of misdirected media speculation and invective."

Webster had no immediate reply.

Atlanta police have said repeatedly that they believe several different killers are responsible for the crimes and some of the slayings seem unrelated to others.

Brown said he telephoned Webster Monday night and the FBI director said he did not recall phrasing his remarks in the way he was quoted. He said Webster told him he had intended only to explain the difficulties of the case.

Meanwhile, a funeral was held at Mount Moriah Baptist Church for Larry Rogers. the latest victim on a special task force list of 23 black youths slain since July 1979.

Carpenters agree to delay picket

Negotiations between Carpenter's Local 918 and Hunter and Lundberg Inc., general contractors for the general classroom and office building, resumed Tuesday but a final agreement was not reached.

However, the union agreed to vote on the contractor's new offer at a special meeting Saturday, Charlie Cameron, the union's business representative, said. Neither party would disclose any details of the offer until a settlement is reached.

The strike, which stopped construction at the general classroom and office building and the city library, began Thursday after a

The union agreed Tuesday not to resume picketing until after Saturday's meeting. If the union votes not to accept the offer, it will hold another meeting to decide whether to resume the strike, Cameron said.

Dog's diet makes no cents to doctors

MARIANNA, Fla. — Dr. Ben Willis of Marianna Animal Hospital didn't know what to think when Steve and Sandra Stewart brought their Boston terrier, Sweetie Pie, into the clinic two weeks ago.

The Stewarts' said the 3½-pound dog wouldn't eat and and had thrown up several pennies. At one point she was in mortal danger.

"I've taken everything out of dogs from corncobs, nuts, bottle nipples, rubber stoppers, bones, needles with thread—you name it," Willis said. "But I've never seen or heard of anything to compare with this highly irregular behavior."

By the time Willis surgery was over, doctors had extracted 80 cents in coins from the pup's stomach, as well as a metal shoe from a Monopoly game, a piece of lead the size of a quarter and a staple.

No one, including the Stewarts or Willis, can figure out how the dog got attracted to the diet, but Willis suggested, "I think she just likes to eat metal."

Protests fail, team name to stay

CARNATION, Wash. - Demons will be Demons.

Tolt Junior-Senior High School's sports teams will keep the name "Demons," the Lower Snoqualmie School Board decided Monday.

The board ruled unanimously that the word has no evil influence on the students, despite testimony from some of the 300 parents who last month asked that the name be changed.

The Rev. Fred Reiter of the Snoqualmie Baptist Church said, "We feel the name is detrimental to the community, morally, socially, physically, psychologically and emotionally."

Diana Board, mother of a Tolt High School student and three Tolt graduates, drew chuckles from the audience when she mentioned Bellevue Christian's school team name, the Vikings.

"We all know the Vikings raped and pillaged convents," she said. "If you feel so strong about the name, then why don't we quit eating deviled eggs, devil's food cake or deviled ham lest we grow horns?"

Reagan signs peanut proclamation

WASHINGTON — President Reagan signed a proclamation Tuesday increasing the quota on peanut imports by 100 million pounds and extending the import period by one month to July 31.

Officials said the action would help offset the effects of last year's poor harvest. The Agriculture Department said it increases the quota from 200 million pounds to 300 million pounds.

Poor weather held down the U.S. peanut crop to about 40 percent of normal last year, creating a shortage and leading to big price increases in peanuts and peanut butter.

Tribe to open its own school

HORTON — The Kickapoo Tribal Council is preparing to open its own school in August in the same building operated by a school district which was voted dissolved last fall.

A school board to direct the new Powhattan school will be appointed this week and sworn in by April 24, said Tribal Council chairman Steve Cadue. When the initial terms run out, the board members will be elected, he said.

The school "will be a state-accredited institution, offer a complete standard curriculum, and in addition it will provide the courses which are relevant to the history culture and current social realities of native Americans," Cadue said in a prepared statement.

Last fall voters decided to dissolve Unified School District 510, which operated the school near the Kickapoo Reservation.

U.S. sends more arms than Soviets

WASHINGTON — The United States already this year has shipped more tons of weapons to El Salvador's junta than the overall amount which leftist guerrillas have received from Soviet-bloc countries, according to government figures.

The Defense Department said Tuesday that from Jan. 1 to the present, the United States has sent 343.2 tons of military supplies to El Salvador. Earlier, the State Department estimated that the guerrillas had received 200 tons of Soviet-bloc weapons.

That figure applied to covert shipments, mostly late last year and through January's failed "general offensive," but since then, the State Department says, the communist flow has dwindled to an insignificant trickle. The U.S. military aid is also only a fraction of assistance—from helicopters to radios to M-16 automatic rifles—currently in the pipeline for El Salvador.

If Messrs. Acker, Carlin and Jeffries were trying to warm the air by addressing K-Staters Tuesday, it might have succeeded. Warmer temperatures are expected today with a high in the upper 60s. Low tonight in the 40s.

Shuttle could be dangerous

The successful landing of the spaceship Columbia at Edwards Air Force Base Tuesday in California is another triumph in U.S. history. Touchdown was perfect. The United States should be proud of its aeronautical achievements.

Now the United States must formulate specific plans to employ the space shuttle for productive. peaceful uses.

Friday, the day Columbia was supposed to be launched, a space official in Florida made alarming remarks about the potential of the shuttle. In effect, the official said the United States has returned to the Cold War, and the space shuttle was a method for the United States to flex its military muscules.

Talk of using the space shuttle as a military weapon from space is not uncommon in Washington, and proponents of such experimentation will continue to push for such measures now that the shuttle has proven successful.

But the United States should be wary of any moves to employ the space shuttle as a military weapon. While it would put the United States on top of the Russians militarily, so did the atomic bomb-but not for long. It would only be a matter of time before the Soviet Union would build a similar, perhaps better spaceship.

The United States should not initiate an arms race in space, nor participate in one.

If the space shuttle will be used for productive, peaceful projects, then it is truly an achievement. If it is to be used as a weapon, then it is a waste of money.

Enforcing rules

Editor,

RE: Restrictions placed upon the use of campus lawns for organized sports.

While playing frisbee on first hand the efficiency of Kenforcing the University's Facilities rule which restricts organized mutilation of certain campus lawns. After approximately 10 minutes of running rampant on the finely manicured lawn known as the band field, the two of us (along with our four frisbees) were accosted by a highly trained campus cop. He informed us in no uncertain terms that we were out of place and referred to an article published in the Collegian. Since we were not on the cowpaths, he must have been right. We were subsequently told to leave the field and did so.

Our limitations thus defined, we set off to find a suitable location. We later observed the same officer continuing his rigorous schedule. Seemingly unconcerned, he strolled by the Anderson Hall lawn where two people on a blanket were peering over a drawing board supported by four cinder blocks. Apparently reasoning that the blanket effectively distributed their weight, leaving the grass unscathed, the officer continued his appointed rounds.

As all things go in circles, so did Frisbees on the field. we. Once more finding ourselves mysteriously drawn to the band field, we instantly realized how told to leave earlier, as we observed what must have been the "grounds crew" feverently at work in the field with their golf clubs. Imagine the injuries we could have sustained as a result of the chunks of grass and soil which were flying about, not to mention the little white balls the crew used to mark the ground where the divots were to be taken from. All in all it Saturday April 11, we experienced seemed like an efficient way to redistribute the thick grass to the State's Traffic and Security in badly tortured area in the middle of the field.

The day's excitement was not yet over. We were eyewitness to a spectacular chase scene only seconds later as a campus policeman in his faithful patrol car jumped the curb east of Danforth Chapel to pursue a Volkswagen on the sidewalk. The policeman sped across the grass, his entire path parallel to a parking lot not more than 20 feet away.

We were fortunate enough to acquire a Collegian from April 7. Lo and behold, there on the front page was the article which the policeman had referred to when the two of us were given our initial reprimand. Approximately midway through the article stated, "Two people playing frisbee wouldn't be considered as engaging in an organized activity," therefore excluding us from the regulation. Apparently the policeman knew the content of the article, because it was he who initially asked if we had read the article, and since there were only two of us we came to the conclusion that we must have had too many

The credit for the inspiration which instigated this letter belongs to the ever-present campus fortunate we were to have been Security and Traffic. They do a job worth writing about.

> Karl Barnett senior in architectural engineering and one other student

I realized Saturday morning, after reviewing my sock supply that I needed to replenish it. I was getting a little tired of pulling at the end of my socks every time I put them on so my toes wouldn't have that uncomfortable feeling of sticking out inside my shoes. I really envy those who can go without socks and still wear their shoes. Personally, I don't like to have my feet sweat inside my shoe with nowhere to vent that perspiration. Toe jam has never wet my appetite, either. I'd rather resort to socks that don't match, and I often have.

But, I'm swaying off the subject. I went to get some socks, on a Saturday morning, at one of those "we sell for less" discount stores. Saturday morning must be when all mothers and their many children venture out to catch the red-light, blue-light, you can't beat it, specials. They come to be persuaded by the voice behind the loud speaker luring them to buy. The voice sounds a little like J.R. and brother Bob to tell you about it, and it's just as annoying on Saturday morning as it is on late night TV.

WHILE TRYING TO block out that fast-talking monotone voice from my mind, I continued to search for some socks. I got to the panty hose section so I knew I was getting close.

Then came the warning over the P.A. system "...only two minutes. shoppers...". The herd commenced to stampede. Mothers dragging their children down the aisle with determined looks on their faces, something like that of Mean Joe have been somewhere behind me, I don't really know, because I quickly side-stepped into another aisle to avoid them.

Finally, I found some socks and made my way to the check out stands. They were packed. People were buying anything from Betsy Wetsy dolls to shoes for the whole family. I stood in line with my measly two pairs of socks and waited.

BEING AT THE end of the line and at the front of the line isn't too bad. It's the in-between, sardine period I loathe. Either the person behind you is breathing heavily and neglected to brush their teeth that morning or the person in front of you is carrying a child who's diapers need changing. It was a good thing I didn't eat breakfast.

Finally I reached the cashier. She was polite enough, but certainly wanted to process my purchase quickly. I gave her a $10 bill, which meant I would get both change and bills back. She counted my change for me, stapled my bag and expected me to instantly

Well, I have to undo one part of Green. They were headed straight my billfold to stuff in my paper for me. The flashing light must money, close that up and open another compartment for my change. My fast hands (feeling rushed by the bad breath behind me) faltered and my billfold toppled over. Curses, I had oodles of change spill on to the floor.

As I frantically picked up my change, people stepped over me, around me and on me. The cashier sluffed it off as another clumsy customer and indeed I felt like a klutz. I left the pennies on the floor and fled.

All of this for two pairs of socks that won't be worn until fall because mother nature did it to me again. Warm weather is rolling around early, and sandals are more my style.

Sandals, without socks.

Jeffries talks of finances, economic change

By TANYA BRANSON Collegian Reporter

A need for immediate change in the economy of the United States was emphasized by Rep. Jim Jeffries (R-Kan.) last night in a presentation to the members of Delta Upsilon.

The fraternity members invited the representative from the 2nd district, which includes Riley County, to speak while Congress is in Easter recess.

"The people on November 4 said they want a change in direction to get in the right direction and have productivity in America," Jeffries said.

President Reagan's budget and tax cut proposals will bring the changes Americans are calling for, he said.

"They (the cuts) had better work and they had better be inititated. America economically is in serious trouble. The private and public debt is higher than it has

THE PROPOSED budget cuts are aimed at reducing growth of the budget, rather than reducing the actual budget, he said.

The money would be cut from "programs that have waste, mismanagement, duplicating and out-right fraud," Jeffries

One of the programs with proposed cuts would affect student loans and grants.

"Loans will be granted to those that seriously don't have any other way of getting here."

The people in the United States also need incentives to help reduce unemployment, he

"We need to get people back to work—first things first," Jeffries said. "Everyone's educated but no one has any work and we're back in the soup again."

Jeffries stressed that he is a "strong proponent" of tax cuts to provide incentive to the average American businessman. Because people are forced to give up so much of their earnings to taxes, there is a decrease in productivity. Americans need to "get producing again" because "productivity is what made America great," he

ALTHOUGH THERE is a "tremendous feeling in Congress" for Reagan and his budget cut proposals, Jeffries stressed the need to act quickly on the proposals.

"The longer we dawdle around there is more of a chance the proposals won't be passed," he said.

Reagan isn't "kidding people" and there won't be "instant gratification," Jeffries said. It may be three years before the effects of these programs will be noticed, he

"I heard Reagan said, 'We're going to operate on a four-year basis.' He's trying to get things done this time."

A portion of the defense budget should go to help develop space technology for defense purposes, Jeffries said. The United States has more defense technology than Russia, but the Soviets will always be ahead in the armament numbers race, he said. The United States should use this technology to build satellites with the ability to transfer men and materials between them. The satellites could be used for spying and storing warheads aimed at Russia, he said.

"We can only hope and pray that a great portion of it (the defense budget) will go to technology."

Bradley receives a hero's burial; many gather in Washington to mourn fire and an Army bugler's mournful "Taps," General of the Army Omar Bradley was buried Tuesday on a gentle hillside alongside some of the 1.3 million American fighting men who followed him to victory against Nazi Germany in World War II.

A creaking black caisson, pulled by six matched gray horses and followed by a riderless, black quarterhorse symbolizing a fallen warrior, carried Bradley's flagdraped casket to the slopes of Arlington Cemetery, overlooking National Washington from the Virginia bank of the Potomac River.

As the procession crossed Memorial Bridge on the final trip to the gravesite, the clop of hooves was broken by the scream of 19 Air Force F-15 jet fighters which passed

The general was laid to rest beside Mary, his first wife and hometown sweetheart from Moberly, Mo., who died 16 years ago. His second wife, Kitty, her head draped in a black veil, listened silently to the final prayers and received the American flag removed from Bradley's gray metal coffin before it was lowered into the soil.

AMONG THOSE at the gravesite were Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, dozens of generals and admirals and about 100 foreign military attaches, standing in Bradley, the last of the nation's five-star generals and first chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, died of a heart attack Wednesday in New York City at age 88. He had lived at Fort Bliss, Texas, for the past four years.

First lady Nancy Reagan, representing her recuperating husband, led a delegation of Vice President and Mrs. George Bush, Cabinet members, high-ranking military officers and diplomats at a funeral service conducted under the Gothic arches of Washington Cathedral.

Maj. Gen. Francis Sampson, retired chief Army chaplain who landed with Bradley at Normandy on D-Day, 1944, eulogized him as a leader who shared Abraham Lincoln's physical stature, modesty, droll sense of humor and sense of duty to protect the lives of his young troops.

"Both knew there is no acceptable substitute for freedom," Sampson told the more than 1,000 mourners at the service.

Senate continues allocations; few budget amendments made

By SUZANNE CRUMRINE Collegian Reporter

Student Senate continued tentative allocations last night considering budgets from seven K-State organizations.

The Puerto Rican Student Organization was the first budget to receive consideration and gain approval from senate without amendments to the Finance Committee recommendations.

The group received a large increase over last year's budget for printing costs. Printing allowances were increased from $35 to $262 to enable the group to send a monthly newsletter to its members.

SOME DEBATE was sparked in the meeting concerning funding for car travel and legislative assembly registration budget requests by the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK).

Rick Mercer, engineering senator, proposed an amendment to delete travel expense money from the budget for ASK's trip to the state capitol for the ASK Mass Lobby Day. Mercer said the lobbying was "not that effective."

In rebuttal to Mercer's remarks concerning effectiveness of mass lobby day, Mark Skinner, junior in political science said, "ASK mass lobby day is a chance for one-to-one pressing of the flesh. There's nothing more effective."

Mercer's amendment failed to gain the necessary two-thirds majority vote to pass.

Allocations for the two legislative assemblies attended by ASK members were cut in half during the meeting. Finance Committee chairman, LewAnn Schneider explained the money was sometimes wasted when registration fees were sent in for some students who then failed to attend the assemblies. She said asking the delegates to pay half the fee would encourage "responsibility in attendance."

THE TENTATIVE budget for Students For Handicapped Concerns was approved by senate with the addition of two amendments to the recommendations made by Finance Committee.

One amendment placed a stipulation on paying the automotive driver's salary.

"I move we pay the salary with the stipulation that the Vice-President for Student Affairs will do everything in his power to persuade the University to assume the full responsibility in 1982 and '83," Dave Anderson, agriculture senator, said.

The driver is responsible for a van providing transportation for handicapped students on campus.

THE OTHER AMENDMENT gave additional funding to the group for more advertising costs as compared to what the extra funding will allow the group to place more advertisements in the Collegian.

"If we're going to pay $4,000 for this organization, we might as well make sure that it's known," said Scot Stubenhofer, arts and sciences senator.

KSDB-FM's budget was approved without amendments, including an increase in the chief engineer's salary which is set at the state level.

The Debate Squad received $6,600 in tentative allocations after a lengthy discussion during the meeting. John Craver, architecture senator, questioned the justificaion for allocating $6,600 for an 'academic group.'

"They're going to the wrong organization for funding," Craver said, adding the group should go the Arts and Sciences Council for

"I don't feel it's appropriate for them to go to Arts and Sciences for funding beacause they are not all in arts and sciences," said Mike Anderson, finance committee mem-

ACCORDING TO Ed Schiappa, director of the debate squad, 55 percent of the members are from the College of Arts and Sciences.

"We are kind of a unique organization as far as who participates and what we do and as a result, this is the only group we can turn to for funding," Schiappa said.

"Neither is every other team (at K-State) made up wholly of one college, " rebuted Ken Christie, graduate student senator.

Schiappa said the debate squad brought recognition to the University.

"It's the only academic, competitive showcase team you've got," Schiappa said. "We do bring students here. We bring faculty members here who would otherwise not be here and who teach classes which would otherwise not be taught."

THE STUDENT Governing Association's (SGA) budget request necessitated line-by-line consideration because of its excessive list of items.

Senators amended the recommendations of the Finance Committee, increasing the budget for advertising and allocating more money than SGA was recommended by the committee.

"Our main purpose is to serve and represent students," Scanlan said.

She told senators there would be special projects that would require more advertising to keep students aware of the campus issues.

An increase in the Finance Committee chairman's salary was included in the budget because of the "exorbitant amount of time" required for the position, said Susan Angle, coordinator of student activities.

The final group to be considered was the intant and Child Care Center, receiving the full $3,928,50 requested. The budget pays for the graduate teaching assistant salary.

Student wins NSF graduate fellowship

Kay Scheets, graduate student in biochemistry, is one of 450 students nationwide to receive a three-year graduate fellowship from the National Science Foundation (NSF). There were about 3,400 applicants for the award.

The award consists of $4,800 for tuition and fees for each year of graduate study.

The award was based on undergraduate and graduate grade point averages, recommendations and scores on the graduate record examination. Consideration was also given to the applicant's perceived ability to make significant contributions over an extended period of time to the sciences in the United States.

K-State woman wins ROTC award

Margaret Young, senior in physics, was one of five Air Force ROTC cadets nationally to receive a W. Randolph Lovelace Memorial Award.

Lovelace Award winners will be considered for a scholarship which provides for an all-expense-paid year of study at a foreign university.

The Lovelace Award is for extraordinary accomplishment in academics, athletics and military performance. The award was presented during a special ceremony in Colorado Springs.

K-State receives research award

The departments of Agricultural Engineering and Grain Sciences and Industry have been awarded $10,000 by Anheuser-Busch, Inc., for research on the production of alcohol from brewers condensed solubles.

The research is the second phase of a project conducted by those departments to find other uses for the concentrated brewery byproduct, which consists of residual sugars, proteins, vitamins and minerals. During the past two years, more than $27,000 has been given to K-State to investigate feed uses of brewers condensed solubles.

Gallagher receives engineering award

Richard Gallagher, associate professor of electrical engineering, has received an award for outstanding teaching and contributions to the engineering profession. The award was from the midwest section of the American Society for Engineering Education.

Gallagher is the 1981 recipient of the Western Electric Fund

Award, which carries with it a $1,000 stipend.

Gallagher's teaching accomplishments were recognized in 1978 when he received the James L. Hollis Award for excellence in undergraduate teaching in the College of Engineering. In 1980 he was selected as a recipient of the Distinguished Faculty Award of Eta Kappa Nu, an electrical engineering honorary.

Meats team takes second in judging

The final meats juding contest of the season netted the K-State meats judging team second place at the Great Plains Invitational Meats Judging Contest at Sioux Falls, S.D.

The team placed first in pork and lamb judging and fifth in beef grading, according to team coach Michael Dikeman, associate professor of animal sciences.

Chris Baker, senior in animal sciences, placed fourth overall, second in beef grading and fourth in pork judging. Michelle Maddux, sophomore in animal sciences, rated ninth overall, second in pork and sixth in lamb judging.

In lamb judging, Deb Rudicel, sophomore in animal sciences, won first place and Brent Kuehny, junior in animal sciences, ranked fourth. In pork judging, Mona Rusk, senior in ag journalism, took first and Brenda Hundley, junior in ag education, placed ninth.

ASPA elects Clynch to be director

Ed Clynch, assistant professor of political science, was elected a director of the Kansas Chapter of the American Society for Public Administration April 7 in Lawrence.

The objective of the American Society for Public Administration (ASPA) is to improve management of the public service at all levels of government.

Naomi Lynn, associate professor of political science, is a member of the national council of ASPA.

Scholarship winners to be honored

Recipients of the 1981-82 Mexican-American Academic Scholarships sponsored by the K-State Mexican-American Alumni Association will be Anita Bond, sophomore in speech; Joseph Varrientos, senior at Wichita High School West; and Paul Olivarez, Dodge City High School senior.

Faculty Senate votes to revise role of their grievance board

By STEPHANIE MOWRY Collegian Reporter

The Faculty Senate unanimously voted to accept a revised statement of the responsibilities of the General Faculty Grievance Board Tuesday.

Floyd Harris, professor of electrical engineering, presented the revision, saying the board has "basically a sound and useful document," but it needs some changes.

The first revision was the definition of what grievances are to be heard by the board. Grievances which may be heard include, but are not limited to "violation and misinterpretation of rules of the University; improper arbitrary or discriminatory action of the University and violation of an instructor's academic freedom."

The revised statement includes a plan for board members to be appointed for a three-year staggered term instead of yearly reappointments. This plan allows for only one-third of the members to be appointed each year so there won't be a complete annual turnover.

Another revision to Grievance Board responsibilities requests the University president to "respond promptly to the board's findings and recommendations" following any board hearings. If the president does not agree with the board's findings, he must submit a written explanation to the board and his response will become part of the written record.

AN EXPLANATION added to the board's statement established that access to the grievance process is a faculty right and no one is penalized for submitting a grievance. Harris said Faculty Senate wanted the faculty to know the grievance board exists for their benefit and punitive measures would not be taken against a faculty member who filed a grievance.

PQ holds strongest majority vote ever

MONTREAL (AP) — The Parti Quebecois, which advocates independence for the Canadian province of Quebec, held its strongest majority yet in the provincial legislature Tuesday as a result of a sweeping re-election victory.

The PQ, which first gained power in elections 4½ years ago, won 80 seats in the

(See related story, p. 11)

122-member Quebec National Assembly in Monday's provincial elections. The opposition Liberal Party won the other 42.

In the popular vote, with 70 percent of the returns counted early Tuesday, the left-of-center PQ had 1,215,523 votes, or 49 percent, and the middle-ofthe-road Liberals 1,147,160, or 46 percent. Although the vote was relatively close, the PQ won many more seats because its vote was more evenly distributed over more electoral districts.

In the previous, 110-member Assembly, the PQ had 67 seats, the Liberals 34, the Union Nationale 5, and independents two. Two seats had been vacant.

The Union Nationale, a conservative French-nationalist party that governed Quebec as recently as 1970, received only 113,601 votes in the incomplete returns, signaling its apparent demise as a significant political force.

The PQ favors "sovereigntyassociation" for Quebec, meaning political independence coupled with continued close economic ties with the rest of Canada. It contends this is the only way for Quebec to end English-Canadian economic domination and preserve its French language and culture. Four-fifths of Quebec's population of 6.3 million is primarily French-speaking.

In a referendum last May, three of every five Quebec voters rejected the PQ's request for authorization to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

As a result, Levesque said during the recent campaign that if the PQ was reelected he would not call another referendum on the separatist question during its next term in power—probably four years.

He turned the focus away from separatism and onto the PQ's claims to have governed the province effectively. Many political analysts here said the poor public image of Liberal leader Claude Ryan, a severe and pedantic former newspaper editor, also cut sharply into potential Liberal strength.

In other action taken by Faculty Senate, an amendment passed by the senate established the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning (FSCUP) as a standing committee.

"Specifically, the committee participates with the University in any decisions with reductions in unclassified positions during a period of financial stress," according to the definition of FSCUP.

The standing committee is composed of one representative from each undergraduate college, the extension division, the library and the general administration.

The immediate past-president of Faculty Senate serves as chairman of the committee and a student representative will be designated by the chairman of Student Senate.

The FSCUP committee becomes the third standing committee of Faculty Senate in addition to Faculty Affairs and Academic Affairs committees.

A MOTION TO REVISE wording of the K-State application for undergraduate foreign students was tabled until further information about the proposal from Jack Lambert, professor of chemistry and sponsor of the motion, is obtained.

Lambert proposed the amendment that would allow foreign students to be allowed entrance to K-State if they have the ability to pay for one year's expenses.

He explained the way the application now reads, "the student has to have personal finances to cover the extent of four or five years of schooling." The information concerning finances is obtained from the prospective student's application.

"In the face of declining enrollment, we may be cutting out some of the students who might come to K-State (if the amendment is not passed)," Lambert said.

The Senate passed a resolution presented by the executive committee to commend the student leadership at K-State for its support in lobbying the Legislature for faculty salary increases. The Legislature approved a 7 percent faculty salary hike and is awaiting approval of Gov. John Carlin. This is less than the 12 percent compensation package requesting a 10 percent increase in salaries with a 2 percent allowance for fringe benefits recommended by the Board of Regents and the subsequent 8 percent increase recommended by Gov. John Carlin.

Crops bugged, infestation reduces yield potential

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - An infestation of greenbugs and chinch bugs, a byproduct of the drought, is damaging the Kansas wheat crop, and the bugs are reported moving from prime wheat country into the state's northern counties.

The earliest reports of greenbug populations were centered in southwestern and south-central Kansas until about 10 days ago. But K-State entomologists told The Kansas City Star Tuesday that the bugs have moved from the southwest to as far north as Oakley in Logan County and east to Hays in Ellis County. They said bugs also were blown north by the wind from southcentral Kansas.

Sedgwick County Extension Agent Bill Cox estimated a 15 percent reduction in yield potential from greenbug damage. Cox said most of the wheat in his county is seriously infested, and some fields are infested with "thousands of bugs per foot of LeRoy Brooks, a K-State entomologist, said the northward migrationwas hastened by spots in southern fields that have begun to die. He said greenbug populations are normally reduced by winter freezes, but the mild, dry weather of the past winter failed to

Brooks said the early start by the bugs combined with dry weather that kept plants from growing fast enough to repel the bugs. He said the taller the wheat the more bugs it

The pest problem could be compounded by what is thought to be the largest chinch bug population since the Kansas State Board of Agriculture started keeping records in 1956. Chinch bugs are normally greater enemies of sorghum than what, but they can also feed on thin wheat fields. Brooks said greenbugs have provided optimum conditions for the chinch bug invasion by killing some plants

Gov. John Carlin signed a bill Monday that was the first step in the state's effort to obtain permission to use a high-powered pesticide for control of chinch bugs. The bill authorizes establishment of state rules and regulations controlling the use of the chemical "Endrin" to aid in the control of sources from which counties can select years. The change is designed to give the names of people for inclusion in jury lists was signed into law on Tuesday by Gov. John Carlin.

Carlin signs bills into law, broadens jury name pool

The measure amends current law to permit a county to use any source of names in compiling jury lists as long as voter registration or census lists remain one of the forms used. Counties are now limited to those two sources.

The bill was one of nine signed by Carlin, including a proposal which narrows the requirements for public letting of contracts by counties.

It requires public bid letting only for construction of a courthouse, jail, other county building, or bridge costing more than $10,000. Currently that is required for all county expenditures of more than $10,000 except some road construction, professional services and insurance contracts.

In addition, the bill changes a requirement that bids be awarded to the "lowest responsible bidder." The bill makes it to the "lowest and best bid."

The Kansas Association of Counties had requested the measure, saying the change in terminology for bidding was needed because a low bidder was not always the best in ability to perform quality work.

Other proposals signed into law will: -Eliminate a requirement that the Division of Legislative Post Audit conduct a finance compliance audit of every state

TOPEKA (AP) - A bill broadening the time period becomes once every three auditors more time to conduct performance audits of agencies.

-Repeal three provisions in current law which gives the Kansas Supreme Court the authority to amend the three statutory codes of procedure-criminal procedure, civil procedure and procedure for municipal courts. The change was made because of concerns among some lawmakers that the authority was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative powers.

-Re-establish the State Board of Embalming until July 1987, when it will again be subject to elimination under the Kansas Sunset Law. Also the bill increases the licensing fees for embalmers and funeral directors, and provides that appointees to the board by the governor be subject to Senate confirmation.

Acker says budget fair, but not adequate

By DEBI DUNCAN Collegian Reporter

The amount students will pay for their education at Kansas regent's schools next year will be decided by the Legislature Thursday or Friday, K-State President Duane Acker, said.

Acker gave a briefing on the 1981 legislative actions which will affect K-State, Tuesday in Forum Hall.

"The legislative treatment of education is equitable, but by no means adequate," he said.

Throughout the session, the Legislature assumed there would be an increase of 15 percent in student fees, Acker said. The Board of Regents has passed preliminary action to increase student fees $40 per semester, he said.

After consulting with deans, department heads, faculty members and students, Acker said he received a "strong message" there should be no differentiation between fee increases of undergraduate and graduate students.

"If undergraduate tuition goes up 15 percent, graduate tuition should go up 15 percent," Acker said.

Acker said he received "pretty much the same message" concerning fee increases for out-of-state students.

"I recommend we treat everybody the same, on a percentage basis," Acker said.

IF A TUITION increase is instituted, Acker said he believes the top priority in using the money should be in Other Operating Expenses (OOE). OOE funds are allocated for the purchase of such things as gas, supplies and equipment.

The 1980-81 Legislature took several other actions that will affect K-State, Acker said. These measures are now on the way to the governor's desk for approval.

One of the appropriations will increase faculty salaries by 7 percent. The regents had recommended a 12 percent compensation package with a 10 percent increase in salaries and a 2 percent increase in other areas such as the retirement program. Gov. John Carlin decreased the amount he recommended to an 8 percent increase in faculty salaries.

The Legislature also approved a 5.5 percent increase in OOE for K-State. However, the diagnostic laboratory and hospital at the Veterinary Medicine Complex received an increase of 6.5 percent in

BECAUSE OF AN increased enrollment at K-State. eight faculty positions and five classified positions were added to K-State's allocations. The University was also budgeted $21,788 in OOE to assist with the enrollment growth.

Appropriations based on enrollment changes made by the Legislature follow a modified method of a system developed by the regents, called the "corridor system," Acker said.

The corridor system uses data from the last known enrollment year to determine whether there have been increases or

Block says end to embargo closer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agriculture Secretary John Block said Tuesday he thought the chances of President Reagan lifting the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union "are much better than they were a week or so ago at the height of the crisis in Poland."

Block, who made his comments in a telephone interview with a group of farm broadcasters, later told eporters he based his comments on recent developments but declined to be specific.

An outspoken critic of the embargo, which was imposed 16 months ago by President Carter in response to the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, Block was asked by the broadcasters about the possibility of expanding the trade sanction as an alterntive to lifting it altogether.

"The potential for broadening it always exists," Block said, "but I can't imagine that it would be a viable alternative under current circumstances. But we never know what might happen from one day to the Administration officials had indicated previously that the chance of lifting the embargo was remote as long as a Russian military intervention in Poland appeared likely.

decreases in enrollment.

If the increase is 1.5 percent or less, a regent's institution is expected to handle the increase in students without additional funds, Acker said.

K-State's 1979-80 enrollment was up 2 percent, so the University will be funded for the 0.5 percent more than the 1.5 percent limit in the 1982 budget.

THE LEGISLATURE provided $120,000 for planned renovation of Nichols Gym, Acker said. Other capital improvements included $600,000 to be used for energy conservation improvements within the University, he said.

An unexpected $115,000 was allocated to purchase library books at K-State, Acker

Thirty-three maintenance positions and $82,778 in OOE were allocated to help maintain the new buildings on campus, he $43,720 was provided by the Legislature to assist in maintenance of the power plant boilers and the purchase of chemicals used in providing boiler water, Acker said.

Panel says rape situation improved though problems remain in court

Collegian Reporter

Although a rape trial can still be a traumatic experience for those involved, the situation has improved. This was the conclusion of a discussion panel Monday night in the Union.

The discussion, "Rape in the Court," was sponsored by the Women's Resource Center and members of the Psychology of Women

The panel, which fielded prepared questions from a mediator and additional questions from the audience, consisted of Robert Socolofsky, Riley County attorney; Sue Jacobson, a Junction City lawyer; and Jerry Mershon, a Riley County district

THE MEETING began with discussion of some of the problems encountered during

The biggest problem in a rape case is getting the woman to testify, Socolofsky said.

"Despite the embarassment and inconvenience of testifying in court and telling her story over and over, it is really in the best interests of the woman to see it through," he said.

Riley County is fortunate because it has people from the Regional Crisis Center to offer support to women during a rape trial, Jacobsen agreed women are less likely to bring a rape case to trial where a support system is lacking. She urged women to communicate with each other about rape and offer support to victims of sexual abuse. "A rape is the most ego-destroying experience a women can go through," Jacobson said.

A woman has to go through a great deal of trauma during a rape trial, but trauma exists in almost all criminal trials, Mershon

"In all crimes—not just rape—victims are forgotten people," Mershon said. "The modern trend is to be more concerned toward all victims of crime."

THE SELECTION of a jury is another problem of a rape trial. The decision to have a jury trial is up to the defendant, Socolofsky

It is then the job of the attorneys to screen out prejudiced jurors, he said.

"Most people who are on a jury are unsure about even listening to evidence in a rape trial," Socolofsky said.

Because female jurors are more likely to be harder on the woman victim, it is best to omit women-especially older women, Jacobson said.

The statutory definition of rape becomes a problem in some cases, Socolofsky said.

"The Kansas statute says the victim must always be a woman, the accused must always be a man and the woman can't be the man's wife," Socolofsky said.

The panel agreed that higher rape statistics come from increased reporting of rape, not a higher number of rapes occurring.

The panel also agreed the existing legal system will never be an effective deterrent to rape. The best way to deal with the problem is to increase preventive measures against the crime, Socolofsky said.

Reelection of separatist government may bring showdown over Quebec

MONTREAL (AP) — The reelection of the separatist government in Quebec sets the stage for a possibly climactic showdown over keeping Canada whole.

The confrontation may take years to unfold, but the renewed prospect of a fractured Canada is likely to revive old concerns in Washington.

Premier Rene Levesque's Parti Quebecois, which advocates "sovereigntyassociation" for French-speaking Quebec, meaning political independence with continued close economic ties to Englishspeaking Canada, won 80 of the 122 seats in the provincial legislature in Monday's

The opposition Liberal Party took the other 42 seats. The popular vote was closer-with 70 percent of the vote counted, the PQ had 1,215,523, or 49 percent, and the Liberals 1,147,160, or 46 percent.

Political analysts here agree that the PQ was re-elected because of its "good government" appeal, not on the separatist issue. But the results nonetheless mean the party is stronger than ever. When it first gained power in November 1976, it won only 41 percent of the vote and 71 seats in a 110member legislature.

Three of every five Quebec voters firmly rejected the PQ's separatist option in May, when the Levesque government asked in a referendum for authority to negotiate sovereigntyassociation with the rest of Canada. Levesque has pledged that in its second term-probably over four years-the PQ will not hold another referendum.

One scenario: the PQ will fight a 1984 or 1985 election against the Liberals on the separatist issue; if it wins, it will try to force the rest of Canada into negotiations; it will then present the final breakaway scheme to Quebec voters in a referendum.

Much now depends on events elsewhere in Canada.

Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau is fighting to push through constitutional reform that is opposed by Levesque and seven of Canada's nine other provincial premiers, who contend it expands federal powers at the expense of provincial autonomy.

French Quebecer Trudeau may become a victim of Monday's vote. He had planned to step down when the reform was complete, possibly early next year. But his successor would probably be an English-Canadian of his own Liberal Party or a member of the opposition Progressive Conservative Party, which has almost no support in Quebec.

Since this would further alienate French Quebecers, Trudeau may be forced to stay on and continue his crusade to keep his home province in the Canadian confederation.

U.S. interest here is deep. U.S. business has an estimated $7 billion in direct investments and Quebec is an integral part of North American air defenses.

Police prepare for ex-presidents

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Police say they are "probably more cognizant of security" for upcoming visits by former presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter in light of the assassination attempt on President Reagan.

"It's safe to say we will provide them security commensurate with their positions, which is former president," said Capt. Don Munsterman of the Kansas City Police Department.

Ford is scheduled to visit Kansas City Thursday for a forum sponsored by a Kansas City bank and Carter will visit nearby Independence, Mo., in May to accept the Harry Truman Public Service Award.

Tigers score run in 9th, edge Royals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Rick Peters singled home Lou Whitaker in the ninth inning Tuesday night to give the Detroit Tigers a 6-5 win over Kansas City in the home opener for the defending American League champs.

Whitaker doubled with two out off relief ace Dan Quisenberry, the third Kansas City pitcher, after the Royals rallied for three runs in the eighth to tie the score.

Hal McRae's RBI double scored Willie Wilson, who tripled, and chased Detroit starter Jack Morris with none out in the eighth. Kevin Saucier gave up a single to George Brett, sending McRae to third. One out later, Amos Otis hit a sacrifice fly and Clint Hurdle singled Brett home with the tying run.

Aurelio Lopez, 1-0, got the win for the Tigers in relief.

The two teams will complete this twogame series tonight at 7:35. Larry Gura, 0-1 after absorbing an opening-day loss to the Baltimore Orioles last week, will be the starting pitcher for the Royals.

The Royals, now 1-2 for the young season, made one last threat in the ninth against the Tigers. After Willie Wilson and Hal McRae both flied out to open the inning, George Brett, who went two-for-three to make him four-for-11 this year, walked on four pitches. But Willie Aikens grounded out to end the 'Cats whip Creighton in men's tennis dual

Although the K-State men's tennis team took the expected win Tuesday against Creighton 9—0, it didn't really get a chance to show its mettle as Missouri Western failed to show for its dual.

According to coach Steve Snodgrass, there was a mixup and Missouri Western thought the meet had been cancelled.

"I was kind of disappointed," Snodgrass said about the no-show. "Missouri Western is better than Creighton.

"The main important thing with the guys is that they can go out there and play some crummy matches (against Creighton) knowing they're a lot better and not get anything out of it or they can go out with a good attitude and get a lot of good experience-which they did," he said.

The main battle was against the cold and wind which resulted in "not a great deal of good tennis," according to Snodgrass.

Nevertheless, the 'Cats won all matches as the No. 1 singles player, Jeff Henderson, defeated Mike Friedbaum 6-2, 6-3; and No. 2 singles Steve Webb beat Steve Wahle 6-1, 6-

Taking the No. 3 singles was Matt Westfall against Creighton's Matt Murray 6-2, 7-5, while Dan Forrester won over Herb Lim 6-4, 6-0 in No. 4 singles. In No. 5 and 6 singles, Dave Krizman defeated Rayner Ferlage 7-5, 6-4 and Mike Goss beat Paul Schaultz 6-2, 6-

Women's portion of KU Relays to begin today with heptathlon

After finishing second to Oklahoma at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla. last week, the K-State women's track team will begin the second portion of the midwest relays circuit (Texas, Kansas, Drake) today in Lawrence when the Kansas Relays get underway.

Most of the events are scheduled for Friday and Saturday, but the heptathlon begins today.

Beets Kolarik and Ronda Bergren will start the competition today and Thursday, running in the heptathlon (seven events). This is the first year the Kansas Relays has had this event

Also on Thursday, Sheila Vargo will run the 5,000 meters.

The action really starts to heat up on Friday and Saturday as K-State will take part in five events on Friday and two on Saturday.

Friday Janell LaValley and Deb Pihl will compete in the 1,500 meters. Pihl finished sixth in the 1,500 two weeks ago at the Texas Relays, while LaValley brought home the only gold medal for K-State, winning the 1,500 in 4:42.61.

Track coach Barry Anderson feels this is the event K-State has its best shot at winning a gold medal.

"The competition's at an extremely high level this year," Anderson said. "There's much much better quality athletes than in the past. Hopefully in the 1,500 meters, Pihl can finish near or at the top. LaValley also has been running really well, which gives us two fine 1,500 runners."

Also performing on Friday for the Wildcats will be shot put and discus performer Janice Stucky. Last week Stucky finished second in the shot put with a heave of 46-5 and third in the discus with a throw of 151-3.

K-State will also put its sprint medley relay and mile relay teams on the track Friday.

Saturday, K-State will finish up its portion of the relays with Kari Jones, who finished second at Oklahoma with a throw of 139-2, competing in the javelin and the two-mile relay team testing its ability on the track.

K-State signs 3rd prep player

Just a day after being rejected by Wichita Heights All-American Aubrey Sherrod, K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman signed his third high school player to a national letter of intent.

Neal Degner, a burly 6-9, 240-pound power forward from Thomas More prep school in Milwaukee, Tuesday announced his intentions to attend K-State.

Degner, an all-conference, all-area and all-state selection, averaged 17.6 points, 7.2 rebounds and 2.3 blocked shots a game this season for Thomas More in leading it to a 21-4 record and the semifinals of the state tournament.

Degner picked K-State over Detroit, Marquette, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Rice and San Diego State. He and his coach, Mike Fons, cited K-State's basketball tradition and Hartman as the major factors in his choosing the Wildcats.

An excellent student who plans to major in business, Degner joins Eddie Elder, a 6-8 forward from Tulsa-Cascia Hall, and Kenny Williams, a 6-4 guard from Chicago-St. Joseph's, on the list of K-State signees.

Since 1955 there has always been some degree of purple in the veins of K-State's athletic director.

DeLoss Dodds has been associated with K-State athletics in one way or another since that year when he first enrolled as a student. He came here on a football scholarship but switched to track after one year and then concentrated on track all four years. After graduating in May 1959, Dodds spent two years as a graduate assistant in track.

In 1963, Dodds was moved up to the head track coaching position. Serving in that capacity for 13 years, Dodds helped "build a good solid track program," which won two

Suns face win or die situation against Kings

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — It's "win or die" for the Phoenix Suns and a "can't lose" proposition for the Kansas City Kings in Wednesday night's National Basketball Association playoff game.

Down 3-1, Phoenix has been pushed to the brink of elimination by the Kings in the bestof-seven Western Conference semifinal series. Game five is set for Wednesday night at the Arizona Veterans Memorial

"The situation for us is simple now," said Suns' coach John MacLeod. "We must win. And that's all there is to it."

Kansas City coach Cotton Fitzsimmons has the luxury of seeing his team at the other end of the spectrum.

"We've won the last three games. The momentum is going our way. It's a can't lose proposition for us," he said. "Things are looking pretty good for us now. "But we don't expect Phoenix to fall down and play dead for us," he said. "If anyone thinks they aren't capable of coming back and winning three in a row, they don't know Phoenix."

GUARD DENNIS JOHNSON said the Suns' chances for winning the series in seven games "still look good."

"If you look at the games we lost, we had a chance to win in the last 45 seconds of each," he said. "But it has seemed we've made a turnover or missed a shot or failed to box out or lost a key rebound when we've needed it.

"We can beat them Wednesday night," Johnson said. "And we'll have pressure on us Friday (in Game six) in Kansas City. But if we beat them badly, it might put some pressure on them, too."

The Suns still appear to be smarting from the after-effects of a 105-68 setback to the Kings at Kemper Arena on March 8. It was the most lopsided loss in Phoenix's 13-year NBA history.

Kansas City also beat the Suns in Phoenix March 25—breaking a nine-game winless streak at the Coliseum dating back to December 1976.

AFTER DROPPING THE playoff opener April 7, 102-80, Kansas City rebounded to post its first post-season win over Phoenix at the Coliseum in three years the following night, 88-83.

Last weekend at home, the Kings took Games three and four by scores of 93-92 and 102-95, respectively.

"KC is playing hard and well," MacLeod said. "But we're not finished yet. We're going to come back. Our offense just hasn't been smooth."

Kansas City's slowdown attack has limited the fast-break Phoenix offense to less than 100 points in each of the last three games.

The Kings have been led by the hotshooting of second-year forward Reggie King and a make-shift backcourt of Ernie Grunfeld and Scott Wedman after injuries sidelined starting guards Phil Ford and Otis Birdsong.

Big 8 indoor championships—one in his final year as head coach—and finished second in outdoor competition five years in a row.

IN ADDITION TO chalking up the championship showings, Dodds coached the cross country team to four Big 8 championships and a second place finish in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championships in 1965.

Then in 1976, the opportunity to move up to assistant commissioner of the Big 8 came. While serving as a liason between the office and the league's coaches, Dodds administered conference tournaments in various sports, including basketball.

"One of the most rewarding was the postseason (basketball) tournament," Dodds said. "I ran it the first year."

He gave up his job in Kansas City in 1978 to return to his alma mater as athletic director. After being a player and a coach, Dodds suddenly had all of K-State athletics under his control, including the $3.2 million budget this year.

IN THE SHORT TIME he has been athletic director, K-State's budget has been colored black and not red as in the past. When he took over, the program was $50,000 under the break-even mark, but this year Dodds said K-State may be as much as $200,000 above water.

Seeing that the athletic department is kept in "good financial shape" is only one duty of the AD, Dodds said.

Another responsibility is keeping a good hand on expenses while trying to improve the revenue capability in order to make a profit. Other priorities he listed were keeping good coaches and increasing donations.

As head of the department, he has helped see K-State football rebound from disastrous probations for NCAA rules infractions while trying to build an honest image. However, Dodds said there still can be trying times.

"We're like a family of 400 kids. You do the best you can. You'll never run a perfect show with a family of 400."

THE HONEST IMAGE he is trying to present is one of many goals he wants to attain at K-State. Dodds said it is important that the program establish credibility with its publics and operate with integrity.

"We're here to give our publics what they want. We want to do it the right way."

One of the things everyone wants is a winning football program, something Dodds said Jim Dickey can accomplish with a little time and support. He knows K-State will not be able to cut corners anymore in order to catch up.

To build a good, solid program, Dodds said K-State has to do it honestly with good students and good coaches. He said the Wildcats could become more competitive in the Big 8 within three to five years.

"Our goal is to look at Kansas State and make Kansas State better," Dodds said. Little by little he said K-State has to make more improvement than its opponents.

"We have to do the best we can with what we have," he said.

ANOTHER OF DODDS' goals is to improve the financial situation. At K-State, football ticket sales and fund-raising are the options, he said. "We picked the fund-raising way," Dodds said. Also, a thorough campaign to increase donations is in operation. Under Dodds, donations have more than doubled.

The year before he came to K-State, donations amounted to about $250,000. In his first year, contributions totaled $556,000. That figure increased to $653,000 last year, Dodds said.

"Our long-term goal is to go over $1 million in annual contributions," Dodds said.

One other goal is to build interest in K-State athletics. Dodds said this is being attempted through organizing the state into Wildcatelubs.

"We hope to have 20 to 25 clubs," he said. In addition, the organization would have a state president and six or seven regional leaders.

The help the clubs would offer during a state-wide ticket drive would be to K-State's advantage, Dodds said.

Through all the efforts to put K-State's athletic finances on solid ground, Dodds is protecting against possible lean years. He is trying to build up a reserve so programs can be spared in such times.

Dodds is convinced the problems of the past will not resurface.

"I'm proud of where we are and I'm proud of where we're going," he said. "I see us healthy and I see us growing."

In the last contest the Ichabods only managed one hit off Wildcat pitcher Cindy Farris, while the Wildcats finished the game with six. But WU's offensive performance may have not been up to its normal caliber last time.

Astronauts reach California after completing a 'flawless' mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - With heads to salute the flight and the bullseye And as he walked around the Columbia on fists clenched, the calm, normally stoic men of Mission Control stood as one Tuesday to cheer the return of the shuttle Columbia from space.

"Room, get ready for exhilaration," Flight Director Don Puddy said as commander John Young guided the orbiter toward a hard-sand landing strip at Edwards Air Force Base.

"What a way to come to California," chortled pilot Bob Crippen to the delight of the flight controllers at Johnson Space Center, who orchestrated the shuttle's flawless shakedown mission.

Smiling, cheering and applauding, the space experts-known as Shuttle Control for this mission-clenched fists above their touchdown.

Puddy told them they had five seconds to "vent their emotions" and then "it's back to work." He was only half joking.

Unlike previous United States space missions, there was no splashdown, and the ground controllers were on duty until the astronauts left the Columbia at Edwards.

When that departure was delayed, Crippen quipped: "If we're gonna get this thing operational this is one of the things we're gonna have to work on some more." A voice from Mission Control told Crippen he doubted "you'll have to wait for your luggage when you get off."

When Young descended from the orbiter, the controllers in Houston applauded again.

an unscheduled inspection, capsule communicator Frederic Hauck said: "It looks like he's doing a post-flight."

After a medical check, a reunion with their families and brief ceremonies at Edwards, Young and Crippen headed for a NASA jet and the final leg of their journey home to Ellington Air Force Base, a short hop from the space center.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials said the two astronauts will undergo medical tests and perhaps a week of debriefings. They are to hold a news conference next week.

For the 50-year-old Young, a former Navy test pilot, the 21/2-day shuttle flight was his fifth trip into space. It boosted his space flight time in Gemini, Apollo and shuttle vehicles to some 588 hours.

The San Francisco native piloted the first manned Gemini flight in 1965 and commanded the next-to-last Apollo moon landing in 1972. In between were other Gemini and Apollo missions.

"The only bad thing is we're going to have to come down," Young told ground controllers Monday night.

For the 43-year-old Crippen, the mission was his first space flight, and he said at one point: "That was one fantastic ride." A native of nearby Beaumont, Texas, Crippen spent two years as a Navy attack pilot aboard the aircraft carrier USS Independence He was chosen in 1966 for the Air Force Manned Orbital Laboratory Program.

Spaceship Columbia's success strengthens building plans

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) - The spaceship Columbia's triumphant journey promises a new era in the exploration of space and again establishes America as a space-sailing power.

"I think we got something that's really going to mean something to the country and the world," astronaut Robert Crippen said during the 541/2-pour flight.

Crippen and shuttle commander John Young were the first Americans to venture into the space since the Apollo-Soyuz mission with the Russians July 24, 1975.

"Through you," President Reagan told the astronauts, "we all feel like giants once again."

The Columbia-the biggest craft ever put into orbit and the first with wings-is a cross between a spaceship and an airplane designed as a freighter that will make 100 or more round-trips beyond earth.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration says the $10 billion Space Transportation System could turn the heavens into a scientific laboratory, a weightless workshop and perhaps even a distant battleground. Even as the Columbia was circling the globe, the shuttle Challenger, still just a partial fuselage with wings, was taking shape inside a Rockwell International hangar near Palmdale, 20 miles south of Construction of the Discovery and the Atlantis should begin in the next year or so, forming the world's first fleet of spaceships.

After a series of Columbia test flights, the shuttles' 60-foot cargo bays may fill with up to 65,000 pounds of cargo.

Scientists and soldiers foresee an assortment of new uses for space, while NASA is pushing the shuttle as a commercial tool. A company can rent a shuttle flight for $35 million or choose a Getaway Special to send a small canister aloft for as little as $3,000.

Industry, so far, has been lukewarm.

The shuttle program, already two years behind schedule, might have faced near disaster had this shakedown cruise gone bad. Some officials speculated that a failure might have stalled the project at least two more years, although NASA promised to continue its support.

Mel Burke, shuttle manager at Dryden Flight Center here, said the craft will be weighed and balanced for analysis of its landing, and cameras will examine the 31,000 tiles that form its heatshield.

Several days after touchdown, a triangular tailcone will be put over the shuttle's rearmounted engine to improve its aerodynamics for the move back to Kennedy Space Center in Florida. Burke said the ship will be mounted atop a Boeing 747 jumbo jet for the ride back.

The two-day trip could begin in about six days. At Kennedy, the ship will be checked and refitted for its second voyage into space, perhaps in the autumn.

Sky glows red, moondog rings

Area witnesses astronomical phenomenons

Collegian Reporter

As the sky glowed red Sunday night, people in the Manhattan area were treated to two rare astronomical sights.

One of them was an unusual and unexpected appearance of the northern lights, or Aurora Borealis, said Charles Hathaway, head of the Department of Physics. The lights were barely visible Saturday night and were easily seen Sunday night.

Hathaway said he got a call from one of his astronomy students Sunday about 10 p.m. telling him there was "something dramatic in the sky." He said he went outside in time to see the sky get "very bright, red and spectacular."

In the Manhattan area, it's not unusual to see the northern lights up to a 15 or 20 degree angle in the north to northeast sky, Hathaway said.

Sunday night though, "they were up to about a 45 degree angle in the sky," he said.

High school teacher creates delicate art from chicken eggs

ELLSWORTH (AP) - When Kepka Hochmann Belton was growing up on a farm in central Kansas during the Depression, her family was so busy getting Americanized, she was discouraged from dwelling on her Czech heritage.

Now at 48, the high school art teacher creates symbols of a whole generation of Czech immigrants who came to this wheatiand from the Old Country more than 100 years ago.

Her neighbors and friends call her "The Egg Lady," a label she earned from long hours of reviving her ancestors' artistry of painting chicken, goose and duck eggs.

In her delicate fingers nature's perfect ovals are transformed into small treasures aglow with colors and designs dating back 2,000 years in Eastern Europe. The Czech term for her creations is "Kraslice," meaning beautiful painted eggs. Easter is her busiest time of the year.

"Right now my family is so sick of eating eggs, even the dog has started turning up her nose when she finds them in her dish," said Belton, a small, animated woman.

She embarked on the intricate art form in 1970 and a patent is now pending. Belton estimates she's completed 5,000 of her miniature masterpieces, which sell from $6 to $25 a piece.

Each layer of color is applied to a raw egg separately with tiny, sable brushes. She said she prefers to use tempera paints, but also works with acrylics and oils.

Layers of clear acrylic are then added to the eggs with the tip of Belton's index finger, sometimes as many as seven coats, to protect the painted eggs. When color and clear varnish are dry, Belton pokes tiny holes in each end of the egg and blows out the yolk and white membrane.

Sometimes it takes as long as 21 days to finish one egg.

"Sometimes I think I'm tired of doing the eggs, but I revive myself by believing that in this way I tell other people about Czechoslovakia, my heritage, and maybe even their own roots," Belton said, who lives in this town of 2,500 with her mother an her daughter Risa-Marie, 9.

"You can't go into the future if you don't know your past," she said.

"It's rare to be seen this high in the sky this far south," Hathaway said. "It's usually most easily seen in northwest Kansas where there are not as many city lights."

THE PREDOMINATELY red glow of the northern lights was caused by collisions with oxygen atoms, he said. Collisions between solar particles and oxygen can also emit a green glow, and blue light is emitted when nitrogen atoms are struck.

"Ham radio operators hear the noise from these disturbances," Hathaway said. "It's sort of a rushing sound."

Another rare occurence-a moondog-was sighted Sunday night by James Legg, professor of physics.

The moondog, which is a ring around the moon, is a type of glory. Glories are parabolas of moonlight bouncing off ice particles in the air.

"The ring around the moon looks like a medieval artist's painting of the halos aound a saint's head, thus the name 'glories',"

"It's a phenomenon similar to a rainbow, where sunlight is scattered off water par-

According to "weatherlore," a ring around the moon is a sure sign of rain, Legg said. Part of Kansas did receive rain Sun-

THE AURORA BOREALIS is caused by positively-charged particles from solar storms that become trapped in the earth's magnetic field and spiral to either the north or south pole, Hathaway said.

The trapped particles collide with oxygen and nitrogen atoms as they spiral. The collisions excite these atoms and cause them to emit light, Hathaway said.

The visibility range of auroras vary, depending on the magnitude of the solar storm and the energy of the particles, Legg

The higher the energy of the particles, the less they bend toward the pole and the closer they are to this area, he said. The angle of entry of the particle will determine if spirals to the north or south pole.

THE APPEARANCE of the northern lights can normally be predicted by monitoring large solar storms, but this weekend's appearance was unexpected, Legg said.

"We didn't have any idea about this happening," he said.

A solar observatory in Arizona reported a large amount of solar flares and activity on the sun Friday, which indicated a greater visibility range of the lights than normal, Legg said.

Legg and another physics professor calculated that it took the particles a day to get here from the sun, which correlates with the first spotting of the lights Saturday night, and their more obvious appearance Sunday night.

Cells prevent natural internal defenses; Suppressors: scientists inject 'natural killer' as remedy

ATLANTA (AP) - Cancer patients-and even some healthy people—have something in their blood that blunts the body's natural defense against tumor cells, researchers said Tuesday.

Scientists at the University of Michigan have discovered a "suppressor factor" that hinders two types of cells in the body's immune system from attacking and destroying tumor cells.

The immune system is the body's internal defense against infection. There is growing evidence it is involved in cancer defense as

Dr. Stanley Schwartz, a pediatrician at the Ann Arbor, Mich., school, said the suppressor factor was found in small quantities in the blood of most people. But levels were two to three times higher in cancer patients and in a few healthy Schwartz described the research Tuesday to the convention of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology here.

Some 10,000 scientists are attending the six-day meeting, which ends Friday. Sponsors say it is the largest scientific meeting in the world.

Schwartz said the suppressor factor may help explain the "vicious circle" suffered by some cancer patients, in which the ability of the immune system to resist the disease actually decreases as the size of the tumor increases

In a series of experiments, Dr. Madhavan Nair and Schwartz found the suppressor factor in patients with cancers of the colon, rectum, large intestine, small intestine, bladder and lung.

The scientists added a purified extract of blood to an artificial culture in which cancer cells were growing along with two immune system cells-"natural killer" cells that attack tumors without need of antibodies, and "antibody-dependent" killer cells which rely on antibodies to recognize the tumor.

Blood from healthy people inhibited tumor cell killing about 20 percent, the scientists found. But blood from cancer patients cut it by 40 percent, on average, and as much as 60 percent in some cases.

The greatest inhibition was from intestinal and bladder cancer patients, the scientists said. Lung cancer patients had the

The two scientists theorize that the sup-pressor factor may be a natural means of putting the brakes on the killer cells, Schwartz said. "Unbridled killing mechanisms, if they go astray, would become pathologic in themselves," he said.

But the scientists do not know why cancer patients-and even some healthy people-have more of the factor, Schwartz said. It may be that the tumor induces the factor somehow. Or it may be that people with high levels of the factor are more likely to get tumors.

The scientists may try to follow people with high levels of the factor to see if they have an added risk of cancer, he said.

Carlin vetoes education finance bill

Tuesday the school finance bill which he said the 1981 Kansas Legislature passed as "a choice for inequity in taxation and lower quality in education.'

And he used his veto message to renew his call for a severance tax to reduce property taxes for financing school operations.

The veto was promised by the governor shortly after the Legislature killed the severance tax, passed the school finance bill and went home for a recess of almost three

In his veto message, the governor noted that each year the Legislature decides how the aid supplied by the state to local schools will be distribute and spent.

"Those decisions govern the quality of education which our children will receive and whether or not all children, regardless of where they live, will have equal access to a good education," Carlin said.

"This year more than ever before, the school finance bill has brought a clarity and focus to the questions which it annually poses. In answering those questions the Legislature has made its choice."

Carlin said that prior to the beginning of the 1981 session, both he and the Legislature recognized that without a stable base of state revenue, the burden for school finance would fall to a greater and greater extent upon the property tax.

"My recommendation was to enact a severance tax on oil and natural gas," the governor said. "This would add $111 million in new money to school aid and reduce the property tax, strengthening the tax base for school finance.

"Since about 80 percent of the proposed severance tax would be borne by out of state

TOPEKA (AP) - Gov. John Carlin vetoed sources, it also offered Kansans the opporunity to recoup a portion of the severance tax they have for years paid to neighboring states. But the Legislature chose a course in sending him House Bill 2590, Carlin said, "which causes a $53 million statewide increase in local property taxes—the largest single yearly property tax increase in our state's history.'

Boom helps banks, hurts housing

ELK CITY, Okla. (AP) — In this secondtime boom town perched on the rim of the high plains, there's a place for anyone who wants to work-but not everyone who comes to work can find a place to live.

The natural gas boom in Elk City is largely hidden from motorists passing through on Interstate 40, the old Route 66. The forest of derricks that marked earlier boomtimes is gone due to an Oklahoma law limiting drillers to one deep gas well per 640

But the figures still add up to "boom town."

FEBRUARY'S SALES TAX collections were 24 percent higher than February 1980, and the town's three banks and three savings and loans have estimated assets of more than $200 million-about $20,000 for each man, woman and child in this town of

The 1980 census shows a 29.7 percent growth rate in the 1970s. Townspeople think it was more. Nearly a quarter of the 182 phone directory Yellow Pages is for companies in the oil and gas business.

Elk City first struck it rich on oil in the 1940s and '50s. Five years ago another wave of prosperity rolled over the town, located 110 miles from Oklahoma City, when oilmen began drilling for gas locked deep in the Greater Anadarko Basin.

Experts estimate the entire basin holds about 88 trillion cubic feet of recoverable gas in deep zones below 15,000 feet. Shallow zones may contain an additional 30 trillion cubic feet or more.

THE BOOM has brought money and people to Elk City, but it has also brought trouble, as growth threatens to outstrip the town's capacity to provide essential services like housing.

Foreman Jerry Grace, 31, supervises two rigs north of town. If a man gets off the bus in Elk City, broke and unskilled, Grace says he'll put him to work that afternoon, at $10 an hour. With an annual 50 percent turnover in roughnecks, Grace's operation is hungry

But some who come to work turn around and leave for want of shelter.

Garry Dickson, 29, and his wife, Shirley, 27, drove into Elk City one recent rainy day from Grenada, Miss., their worldly goods piled in the back of a pickup truck. Dickson, a welder helper who has been out of work for four months, was offered a job at a nearby

THE DICKSONS had been on the road

"We found some little motels, one room, no phones, no ice buckets-just a bed, a bathroom and a TV. And they wanted $20 a night. That's the cheapest we could find," the travel-weary Dickson said.

Houses are for sale in Elk City and lowrent apartments are available for those below the income ceiling. But for people like Dickson-too poor to buy and too rich for subsidized housing-settling in Elk City can be a nightmare.

Growth "has put pressure on us to work harder at planning," said Mayor Larry Wade, who doubles as publisher of the local

But Wade denied that Elk City is a boom town, at least in the rough-and-tumble sense of the 1920s.

"The oil and gas industry is so much more sophisticated....People have to know what they're doing more than in the shallow drilling days," he said.

Iran accuses conference mediator of collaboration with Iraqi rivals

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran accused the head of the 41-nation Islamic Conference Organization on Tuesday of collaborating with Iraq in their six-month-old war, and implied he was a puppet of "the Great Satan, the United States."

ICO Secretary-General Habib Chatti, a former Tunisian foreign minister, is a member of the nine-man ICO peace mission that has shuttled between Bagdhad and Tehran three times since February in search of a truce. The Kuwait newspaper Al-Qabas reported Tuesday that the mission had encountered "insurmountable dif-ficulties" in mediating the conflict.

It quoted unidentified mission members as saying peace is impossible "unless a dramatic change takes place in the Iranian government attitude."

The Iranian news agency Pars, carried a sharply worded Foreign Ministry statement Tuesday that it said was a reaction to a

"Dear Mr. Chatti, it would be worthwhile for you to realize the Islamic nation of Iran will never submit to political games whose rules have been formulated by the Great Satan, the United States," the statement

It added that Iran considers "the recent statement of Mr. Habib Chatti as being indicative of his partiality in favor of the aggressive acts of (Iraqi President) Saddam Hussein and considers such statements as revealing his collaboration with him in imposing tyranny and criminal acts on the Islamic nation of Iran."

The statement called on ICO members to announce "their stance with respect to such a political trick unambiguously."

Federal income tax return filing deadline is midnight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The final countdown is under way for Americans to file their 1980 federal individual income tax returns with the Internal Revenue Service.

The deadline is midnight tonight. The IRS expects about 13 million tax returns in the last week of the filing season. It estimates that about 94 million returns will be filed this year. Most large post offices that provide 24hour service are expected to accept tax returns up to the deadline and affix a postmark so that it meets the deadline, says Jeanne O'Neill, media relations officer with the Postal Service. For those who can't meet the deadline, the IRS provides a two-month automatic extension, to June 15, with the filing of Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Tax Returns." That should be filed by midnight Wednesday along with a check for at least 90 percent of the estimated taxes owed. If a taxpayer owes more than 10 percent of his or her taxes when the completed return is filed, the IRS can levy an "underestimated tax penalty" and possibly a late filing penalty of 5 percent for each month it is overdue, says IRS spokeswoman Ellen Murphy.

Extensions are not given to taxpayers filing the single-page 1040A short form or those who want the IRS to compute their

The IRS also has advice for those who have completed their returns but do not now have the money to pay their tax liabilities: Mail the return by midnight Wednesday and include any amount possible. Also enclose a letter telling the tax agency you don't now have all the money. The IRS will send a bill including interest—at a 12 percent annual rate—on the balance, according to Murphy.

The patients were lying in urine or in feces; and there is no mattress pads on there, so it just run all up on these people, and it's in their hair and under their toenails and dried between their toes." (Official Transcript of the Hillhaven-Topeka Administrative Hearing, January, 1980)

"Collectively, as well as individually, these problems were not outside the range of reasonable normalcy for a skilled nursing care operation . . . The 1980 certification which is currently under consideration should be issued without delay or prejudice." (Hearing Officer's Report of the hearing, to Joseph F. Harkins, Secretary, Kansas Department of Health and Environment, January, 1980)

Volcker says wage increase rates must decline

By DAMIEN SEMANITZKY economy declined, while oil prices Managing Editor rose sharply. Real wages for the

The rate of wage increases has to decline before the American worker can hope to benefit from a lower inflation rate and increased national productivity, according to Federal Reserve Board chairman Paul Volcker.

Volcker delivered the University's 54th Landon Lecture Wednesday. He spoke on methods of dealing with inflation before approximately 1,300 in McCain Auditorium.

"Wages and salaries account for approximately two-thirds of the national income," he said. "They are the dominant share of business costs. So long as the momentum of high wage settlements continues, there is a clear danger that real activity, as well as prices, will be squeezed and financial restraint is brought to bear.

"On a national level, the result is an excessive level of unemployment and slow growth. On a local or industry level, lay-offs, plant closings, and even bankruptcies would be the symptoms."

VOLCKER CITED the current problems of the auto industry as "instructive."

He said in the 1950s the industry set a pattern of wage contracts to take into account inflation and a "productivity improvement factor designed to achieve gains in real wages."

However, he said, in the '70s, productivity growth in the economy declined, while oil prices rose sharply. Real wages for the worker, as a result, actually declined in the past few years, as the auto industry itself had to deal with "fierce foreign competition."

Wages for auto workers and the industry's costs increased concurrently with an increase in American auto industry competition from foreign producers.

"Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, automobile industry wages were about 30 percent more than the manufacturing average—a differential related to higher-than-average skill levels and the nature of the work," he said. "Between 1970 and 1980, auto wages rose about 150 percent, as opposed to 120 percent for manufacturing as a whole, bringing auto wages 60 to 70 percent above the national average.

"Moreover, with average labor compensation at Ford and GM approaching $20 an hour this year, the industry is at a distinct competitive disadvantage."

THESE PROBLEMATIC trends in the auto industry are symptomatic of the larger problem of inflation in general, Volcker said.

"If inflation into be unwound and our industry is to restore full competitiveness and provide high levels of employment, private behavior in wage bargaining and containing costs generally will need to reflect the new realities of the marketplace.

"With restrained monetary and fiscal policies, that will happen,"

he said

The federal reserve system, partially because of a sense of economic "malaise" about the country's economic performance on the part of the American worker, was slow to institute needed monetary reform, Volcker

"From an unemployment rate generally of less than 5 percent, and productivity growth of almost 3 percent a year through the mid-1960s, we have seen unemployment rise to a range of six to 8 percent and productivity drop toward zero."

THE INABILITY of the federal reserve system to effectively develop methods to control inflationary policies in the past resulted in part because of its failure to identify details of the nation's economic problems. Volcker said it struck him as interesting that one former Landon lecturer, Nelson Rockefeller, spoke on "Our Countries Problem: Solutions."

Volcker alluded to a recently circulated Peanuts cartoon to illustrate what he said was the system's sluggishness to institute reform. In the cartoon, Lucy in her "psychiatric advice" booth tells Charlie Brown there are two types of people who go on cruise ships: Those who take deck chairs and face them backwards because they want to see where they've been, and those who face their deck chairs forward to see where they're going.

Lucy asks Charlie Brown which category he belongs to. He responds that he belongs to the category who have not yet unfolded their deck chairs.

"We've taken some time to get our economic deck chairs unfolded," Volcker said.

VOLCKER DEFENDED the fed's monetarist policies as the only way to attack inflation successfully.

"I know we can argue about the exact relation between money and inflation—and the definition of money itself—can be debated almost endlessly," he said. "But there can be little doubt that, over reasonable periods of time, the rate of inflation is related to the growth of money supply.

"If we are serious about inflation, the growth in the number of dollars available for spending must be adjusted to the sustainable real growth rate for the economy.

That is our job in the Federal Reserve, and we are determined to carry it out, and I am encouraged to believe that the necessity of that policy is now understood."

Volcker said present inflation woes began in the '60s when the government began increasing expenditures without raising taxes. Large federal deficits and increasing demands for private credit further complicated the problem.

"On at least three occasions—in 1966, 1969 and 1974—restraint on credit by the Fed bit hard, but it stopped short of permanently turning back inflation when severe financial pressures and recession developed."

Reagan reasserts desire for reduction in tax rates

WASHINGTON (AP)—
President Reagan told Americans just hours before the Wednesday midnight deadline for filing income taxes that they already pay too much to the government and should let vacationing members of Congress know they will no longer stand for it.

In a message clearly aimed at getting his tax and spending cuts back on track, the convalescing president said, "Americans will continue to pay too much money to the federal government until the Congress acts on our proposals to reduce tax rates across the board."

Congress is on a two-week recess, after committees in both chambers delivered setbacks last week to the Reagan budget plan.

"Americans have always been prepared to pay their fair share," Reagan added in a statement, "but today they should make clear to all elected officials that government has gone beyond its bounds and that the people will not tolerate the ever-increasing tax burden they have experienced in recent years."

Taking note of rival tax proposals in Congress, Reagan said "they will result in higher taxes for the American people. In fact, these alternatives are not the answer; they are the problem.

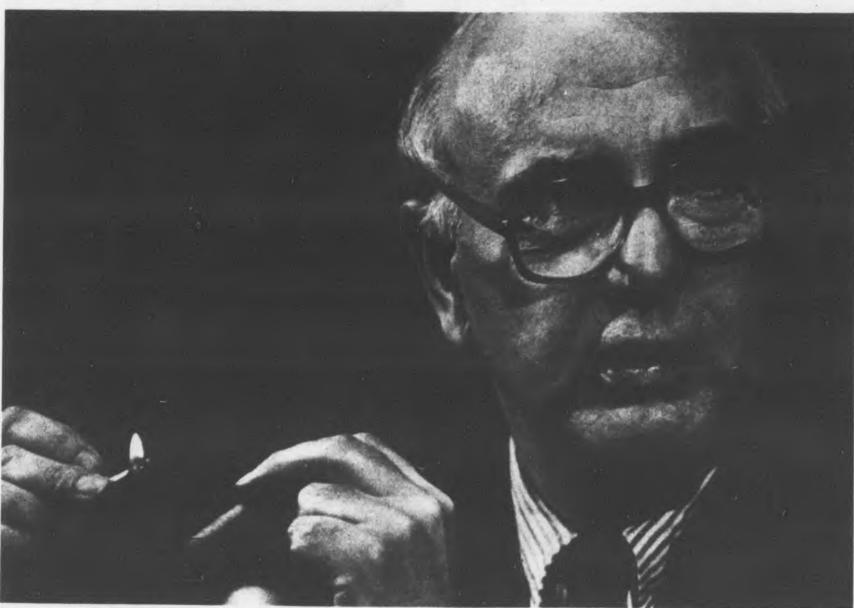

"Taxes are much too high to deal in half measures," Reagan said.

The president, who paid $67,465 in federal income tax for 1980 on an income of nearly $228,000, did not appear in public to air his statement. Instead, he spent the day resting and reading in the family living quarters.

From the president on down, administration officials gave no sign of retreat or compromise from Reagan's plan for a 10 percent, across-the-board cut in tax rates each year for three years.

Just last week a Democratic alternative was proposed by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. It envisions a one-year cut of varying amounts, changes in brackets to offset inflation, and savings and investment incentives.

Rep. Barber Conable (R-N.Y.), senior Republican on the committee, said the president will win less than a 10 percent tax cut from Congress and eventually will have to compromise.

Pausing for a puff policies that might lead to an increase in inflation, "expansionary monetary policies would incite higher, not lower interest rates, Volcker said.

"What we can do, however, is reduce the demands on the economy from fiscal policy and deal with other sources of price and cost pressures," he said.

For instance, he said, one factor which can be focused on is competition for money from the federal deficit.

"This year, about 1/4 of our domestic gross savings—and over 1/2 of net savings—will be absorbed by the federal government to finance the gap between its own expenditures and revenues and its 'off-budget' credit programs.

"If this $80 billion or so of financing were not required by the Treasury, more capital would be surely available for the additional private investment we sorely need—including modernized plant and equipment, new energy sources, new homes and the VOLCKER SAID he is encouraged by the Reagan administration's budget-cutting attempts.

"The proposed cuts of $40 to $50 billion for the next fiscal year sound, and are substantial, but they still amount to only 7 percent of the budget total."

The magnitude of the budget-cutting job should not be underestimated, he said.

"Moreover, further large budget cuts will be required in future years to make room for the tax reduction that we need, and those additional cuts in federal programs to which we have all become accustomed may be even more difficult to achieve than those currently under consideration.

"The effort is dictated by only one overriding fact: I see no other way to reduce the inexorable pressure that the federal budget places on our financial and economic system."

"The next year or two will be a severe test of our political will to sustain the antiinflation drive."

Riley fire destroys antique store

RILEY — No one was injured Wednesday when a fire destroyed an antique store in the main business district of this town of 700, about 20 miles northwest of Manhattan.

The fire began about 1:50 p.m. in the Olde Shoppe while two employees were stripping furniture with paint stripper, Del Petty, head of the Riley County Volunteer Fire Department, said.

"The fumes were apparently building up. One of the employees lit a cigarette. They said it looked like the air was on fire," Petty said. "They were lucky they were by the back door and could get out fast."

He said employees estimated the fire caused $30,000 to $40,000 worth of damage to the store's contents and $40,000 damage to the building. He added the amounts were "preliminary ballpark figures."

Four trucks were sent to the fire. Firemen from Leonardville, Riley County, Ft. Riley and the volunteer fire department from the city of Riley all answered the alarm. Petty said the fire was under control by 4 p.m.

"The Olde Shoppe is directly across the street from the fire house and about 40 or 50 feet from the nearest hydrant," he said. "It's good they jumped on it real quick or the whole block might have gone up."

Firemen were able to save some antiques from the building. Their biggest concern was that adjoining buildings might ignite. Petty said the Hassenbrook Grocery Store next to the antique shop "probably suffered a few hundred dollars in smoke damage."

Brigitte Carver, the owner of the building, is in Europe and Petty said he didn't know if she had been contacted about the fire.

Wolf Creek licensing battle begins

EMPORIA — Coffey County residents urged Wednesday that an operating license be withheld for the Wolf Creek Nuclear Power Plant until a suitable county-wide evacuation plan is devised and funded.

Utility lawyers argued funding for such a plan was the county's problem.

The exchange came in a prehearing before the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board. After more than two hours of testimony, the board agreed to conduct a full hearing at a time and place to be announced later.

The purpose of Wednesday's hearing was to identify issues to be considered in the application by Kansas Gas and Electric Co. of Wichita and Kansas City Power and Light Co. to operate Wolf Creek Nuclear Generating Station No. 1 now under construction near Burlington.

The ASLB, an arm of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, heard opposition from several Coffey County residents and the Wichitabased Kansans for Alternative Sources of Energy.

Students ignorant of foreign affairs

WASHINGTON — Scholars and business leaders expressed dismay Wednesday about a government-sponsored study that found college students woefully ignorant on foreign affairs. One university president said it documents "nearly catastrophic" insensitivity to the rest of the world.

In tests administered to 3,000 students on 185 campuses, more than one-third indicated they couldn't care less about international matters.

Seniors answered only 50 percent of the questions correctly, freshmen 41 percent and two-year college students 40 percent.

Two-thirds of the seniors were stumped by a multiple-choice question on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Nations. Less than 30 percent realized that OPEC includes nations outside the Middle East.

Although almost 90 percent had studied a language, only one in three felt they could use it to order a simple meal or seek directions, and only one in 12 could understand a native speaker.

Less than one senior in 10 scored above 67 percent on the Educational Testing Service test. No one got more than 84 of the 101 questions right.

Fear stops fraud reports, study says

WASHINGTON — Forty-five percent of federal employees participating in a survey said they had personally observed fraud, waste or mismanagement in their agencies within the past year, the government said Wednesday.

Of those who saw such improper activity, 70 percent said they told no one and did nothing about it—mostly because they feared reprisals or thought nothing would be done anyway, the survey said.

Among those who reported such wrongdoing to superiors or inspectors 43 percent said they felt the reported abuses had not been corrected.

About 9 percent who reported observing wrongdoing said the waste or mismanagement cost the government more than $100,000.

The survey was conducted by the Merit Systems Protection Board, a government agency created in 1978 to protect whistleblowers—government employees who report wrongdoing.

TOPEKA — The last tenant of Topeka's historic Jawhawk Hotel will be evicted Thursday and could face charges if she refuses to leave the building by noon, a hotel spokesman said Wednesday.

The downtown landmark—once the headquarters of the Kansas Republican Party—has been closed since April 2 for renovations. Long-term tenants, many of them elderly, were notified in January that they would have to move out by April 1. The hotel also served daily customers.

However, a 47-year-old woman who hotel employees say has lived on the second floor of the hotel for about 18 months, has refused to leave.

Wrecking crew workers have reported that the woman hides from them while they tear away partitions in walls surrounding her room. The seven story hotel's 237 rooms are being converted into offices.

Tom Corcoran of B.A. Development Co., which is renovating the building, said an eviction notice has been filed in Shawnee County District Court. Based on this, he said the woman could be charged with trespassing if she fails to leave by Thursday's deadline.

Religion apart from education

In the midst of America's current turmoil concerning moral consciousness, religious exploitation continues to prosper.

The latest entreprenuers to benefit from the return to religion are the publishers of religious textbooks. According to Newsweek, one company supplies books to 10,000 schools, another stocks 4,200 churches that operate their own schools.

The main users of these books are fundamentalist schools whose purpose is to promote religion before education. The students in these schools are there because their parents believe in the primacy of God in education.

The religious texts often distort traditional literature and scientific fact. One text goes so far as to criticize Ralph Waldo Emerson as "the nineteenth century's arch-heretic...Christians must repudiate the teachings of Emerson and his philosophical descendants.

Up to now, these texts have been confined to the fundamentalist schools. Their emergence into the public schools, however, may not be far off.

If children are to be allowed to form objective and independent opinions and theories, religion and education must remain separated.

Coalition needed

Editor.

Thursday, April 9, Student Senate voted to refrain from funding the newly formed Coalition for Human Rights. The Senators felt that University money should not support a group "controversial" in nature. We believe that if the Coalition is controversial, then the basic issue of supporting human rights is also controversial. And, because of the following activities, we think that the Coalition should have been funded.

First, during the initial months of its existence 150-200 people signed a mailing list in order to receive the group's newsletter. Out of that larger group, a substantial number have actively been participating in other activities of the group. These activities include helping sponsor the second annual Lou Douglas Series: "Perspectives On Human Rights." Along with and other campus organizations, the Coalition for Human Rights was host to four internationally known speakers: former U.S. Senator Dick Clark, African specialist Bill Sutherland, former U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador Robert White, and American educator in Nicaragua John McFadden. The Coalition was also able to raise more than $200 to send back to Nicaragua with Human rights issues in foreign countries are often affected by foreign policy. Since that policy projects an image of us as a people, we as individuals have to do our best to educate ourselves about any issues that effect that policy. The Coalition for Human Rights provides a good opportunity to involve ourselves in this educational process.

Good sports job

Editor,

The Collegian's sports staff deserves to be commended concerning their coverage of K-State men's and women's athletics. Their articles are full of contest information, and especially interesting are the quotes of players and coaches. Weekend sports events are sometimes missed by the students. However, Monday's

In search of the Sun Goddess

The sun goddess visited K-State one day. She stood in front of the Union and made a declaration to all honorable college students that they should fall on their beach towels and worship her.

She promised faithful worshipers would receive the full force of her cosmic rays and she would bless them by turning their skin a dark shade of tan.

I just happened to be walking out of the Union when I heard her shouting her promises. I thought it sounded like a pretty good deal. I was tired of having skin that looked like the underside of a frog.

SO I RAN to the spot where she had been preaching, but I was too late. She had taken off for Padre Island to appear at a sun worshiper's convention.

Luckily, some of her followers were still hanging around the Union. (I could tell who they were by the way they kept moving to stay out of everyone's shadow.) I ran up to one girl who had skin the color of bronze metal and a face the color of a ripe strawberry. She said her name was Sandy and she agreed to show me what to do to become a true sun worshiper.

"It's hard work," she said. "You must be willing to sacrifice everything in order to be a true worshiper.

I assured her I was sincere in my desire to achieve the perfect tan.

"The first thing you must do is learn how to worship properly," Sandy said. "The best thing to wear when you are worshiping is nothing, but since you are just a beginner I would suggest a twopiece swimsuit with the smallest two pieces of material you can find."

"After I am properly attired, what do I do?" I asked.

"You must devote at least two hours of your time every day to worship outside in the sun," she said. "The best time for you to be outside would be from 11 a.m. to 1

"But what if I have classes?" I

"If you seek the reward of a dark tan you must be willing to make sacrifices," she said.

"Well, two hours isn't bad. I can get in a good game of tennis and ride my bike," I said.

SANDY STARED AT ME as if I had committed all seven of the deadly sins.

"You must spend your two hours lying prone on the ground on a beach towel with your body covered with oil," she explained.

"Do you mean to tell me I have to spend two hours sweating on the ground, with bugs getting stuck on my suntan oil?" I asked.

Sandy flashed her big smile at me and said, "Isn't that a small price to pay for the blessing of the sun goddess? After all, you are allowed to roll over every fifteen minutes."

I looked at her with her dark brown suntan and looked at my glow-in-the-dark skin and I realized she had a point.

"Okay," I said, "that sounds fair, but what happens when it's raining? Do I get to take a break on those days?"

"A true sun worshiper lets nothing stand in the way of the sun's rays," Sandy said. "You must be prepared to meet all adversities. Keep a sunlamp in your

"A sunlamp! Hey, wait a minute.

I could get skin cancer!," I screamed.

Sandy withered. Her dark brown skin turned slightly green.

"Don't," she whispered, "ever say those two words aloud."

"You mean skin cancer?" I carefully whispered.

She nodded fearfully. "And there are a few other words to avoid-like dry skin, wrinkles and, worst of all-fading.'

"There's an awful lot to learn about being a sun worshiper. Good thing I'll get time off in the winter." I said.

SANDY GLARED AT ME.

"I thought I explained that to you. True worshipers don't give up their sun," she exclaimed.

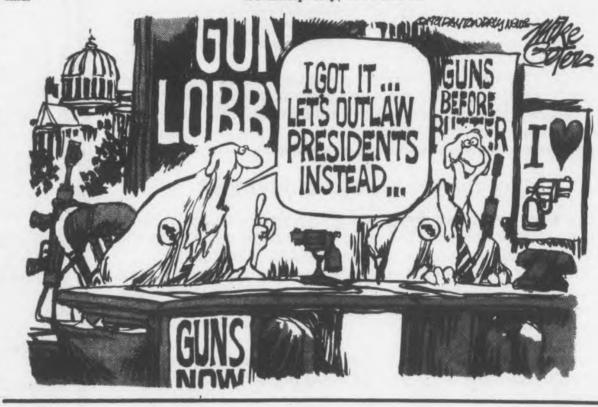

"But there is no sun in Kansas in the winter. And a sunlamp just won't be enough to give me a dark tan. What am I supposed to do?"

"Haven't you ever heard of tanning salons?" she asked impatiently. "They are our very own temples. You have your own private booth where you can sit and receive your special dose of artificial sun rays."

"A tanning salon! This could get expensive," I said.

"It's the price you have to pay," Sandy said. "Listen kid, I've got to go now. I've wasted part of my worship time trying to convert you. From the looks of your skin, you'll probably only burn and freckle anyway. If I were you I'd get a summer job inside and leave the tanning to the truly devoted."

I looked down at my pale white arms, realizing she was probably right. I had thirteen new freckles just from standing in the sun talking to her.

Reagan grants pardon to former FBI men granted unconditional pardons Wednesday to two former FBI officials convicted of authorizing illegal break-ins during the ageny's probe of anti-war radicals during the Nixon administration.

W. Mark Felt and Edward Miller acted "not with criminal intent, but in the belief that they had grants of authority reaching to the highest levels of government," Reagan said in a written statement.

"America was generous to those who refused to serve their country in the Vietnam war," the president said. "We can be no less generous to two men who acted on high principle to bring an end to the terrorism that was threatening our nation."

Fred Fielding, the president's counsel, said the decision to look into the case came on Reagan's own initiative. Fielding said Reagan signed the pardon March 26, but "events overtook it" and delayed public announcement. Reagan was shot in an assassination attempt March 30.

Brian Gettings, a lawyer for Felt, said the pardon erases the stigma of conviction.

"It's a vindication," he said. "They believed at every single moment that they were acting in the best interests of the country and they were doing nothing wrong. It has been recognized by no less than the president of the United States. It means everything to them."

Gettings said he had not requested the pardon, but was generally aware it was

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan being considered. He located Felt in his doctor's office to inform him. Felt's response was: "I don't think I need to see the doctor."

> Later, Felt declared "I am extremely grateful, just more grateful than I can possibly say, and I thank him (Reagan)."

> Miller also expressed gratitude. "My first thought when I got the call was that I certainly owe the Gipper," he said, referring to Reagan's film portrayal of one-time Notre Dame football star George Gipp.

> Felt and Miller were appealing their U.S. District Court convictions of violating the civil rights of friends and relatives of members of the Weather Underground, a radical anti-war group.

> After their conviction last December, U.S. District Judge William Bryant fined Felt $5,000 and Miller $3,500. The fines were not paid, pending appeal.

> Both men admitted approving break-ins of private residences, but Miller's lawyer, Thomas Kennelly, said the practice was long-established and would be possible under current guidelines if the bureau's director or the attorney general approved.

> Felt was then-FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's principal deputy and Miller headed the FBI's Intelligence Division.

> They were fined four days after charges were dropped against L. Patrick Gray, acting FBI director under then-President Richard Nixon.

Students to voice their suggestions for changes in intramural program

Students who have suggestions for changes in the intramural program will have an opportunity to voice their opinions today at 4 p.m. in the dance room of the Washburn Recreation Complex.

"Every year we have a managers' meeting at the end of the year to discuss possible rule changes," said Bob Hess, graduate in health, physical education and recreation and assistant for Recreational Services intramurals.

Hess and Steve Martini, assistant director of recreation services, have prepared a list of changes they believe should be made in recreation programs. The list will be presented for discussion and the proposals will be voted on. Any student who attends may vote and living group representatives are required to attend.

The most controversial suggestions will concern softball, Hess said. In the recreation league, they a proposal to eliminate the umpire and create an offensive pitcher will be discussed. The batter would only get two pitches and if he failed to hit either, then he would be declared out.

The same changes are being proposed in the co-recreation league, except the umpire would be retained but would not call balls and strikes.

These changes would eliminate walks and would speed up the game, Hess said.

Any student attending will be allowed to propose changes in the intramural program,

"Someone might have a better idea than we do," Hess said. "If someone suggests something and everybody there says yea, then we'll probably vote on it then and

Other proposed changes include requiring at least four individuals or teams participate in a sport before T-shirts are awarded to winners, requiring a minimum of eight contestants or teams before points will be given and eliminating women's kickball from the schedule.

Sneaking a peek...A student from the College of Home Economics studies the Fruit of the Loom Underwear display on the first floor of Justin Hall.

Atraditional home ec course exhibits 'for men only' display

By KAREN FRANKLIN Collegian Reporter

A display aimed at catching the attention of men is reflected in the windows of Justin Hall this week.

"For Men Only," was the window display theme assigned to students in the all-female Visual Merchandising class this week. They were given the challenge of creating a nontraditional display that featured a product men would buy and use for themselves.

"Someone overheard a guy saying they never do anything for men, so I thought we would do something for men," said Margaret Ordonez, assistant professor of clothing, textiles and interior design and instructor for the class.

"Some of the girls felt it was a real challenge. They had to stop and think how they could make a window appeal to men," she said.

THE THEME of the window became,

"Color Next to the Skin—Fruit of the Loom Underwear." A colorful arrangement of men's briefs, shorts and undershirts are displayed on several crates against a background of the Fruit of the Loom emblem, which is an array of apples, oranges, pears, bananas and grapes.

"I had a lot of fun doing it," Ramona Norris, junior in clothing retailing, said. "It's a window that can really sell."

More men than usual have been stopping to look at the display, Ordonez said.

Although most of the students in the class are fashion marketing majors, there are also business, interior design and general home economics majors, she said.

The purpose of the class is to make students aware of the problems involved in display, such as what props to use, how to arrange the props to attract attention and how to create interest, Ordonez said.

Canadians debate constitutional reform; Power play: dispute stems from deep-set differences

MONTREAL (AP) - The debate over Canada's constitution enters a new and critical phase Thursday, having been transformed from a dry legal duel into a passionate political fight punctuated by a charge of "fascism" and a rare filibuster in the Canadian Parliament.

Eight provincial premiers opposed to Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's plan to reform the country's antiquated constitutional structure will gather in a televised ceremony in Ottawa Thursday to sign a document offering their own alternative proposal.

The question is whether Trudeau will negotiate.

THE ARGUMENT IS dealing with a U.S.style bill of rights and a constitutional amendment procedure.

These items might seem unobjectionable on the surface, but they have fired up the regional and ethnic antagonisms that have long troubled Canada.

A law of the British Parliament, the British North America Act of 1867, set up the

However, the class is not designed to train the students to be a part of the visual merchandising staff in a store, she said.

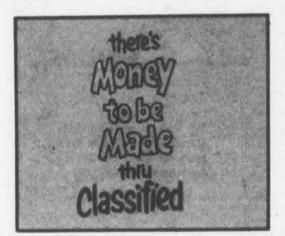

"Universities usually don't train people to be window dressers," she said.

ORDONEZ HAS "re-worked a lot of the assignments" this semester because it is her first semester teaching the Visual Merchandising class.

She has created the "For Men Only" window display assignment, and an interior and exterior window display for Manhattan clothing stores.

"A number of merchants cooperate and let us borrow current, fashionable mer-chandise," Ordonez said. "We always credit the merchants-it's good advertisment."

The themes of some of the other window displays this semester have been "Wind of the Western Look," "Look Like an 'Ace' on the Tennis Court," and "Simplify Your charter.

The Canadians have left it in British hands because they have been unable to agree among themselves on an amending formula-quarreling over such questions as whether more populous provinces should have a veto over constitutional change.

Any amendments Canadians desired had to be adopted in the London Parliament.

AFTER ANOTHER FRUITLESS round of constitutional negotiations with the leaders of Canada's 10 provinces last year, Trudeau decided to act unilaterally to "bring home" the constitution.

The Canadian Parliament, dominated by his Liberal Party, is to ask its British counterpart to hand over control of the document to Canada, but to first make some final amendments, including insertion of a bill of rights and an amending formula.

Two provincial governments—those of Ontario and New Brunswick-support the Trudeau plan. But the others oppose it.

They contend Trudeau is violating a "convention" of Canadian politics by trying to enact amendments affecting the federalprovincial balance of power without obtaining provincial approval. The Newfoundland Supreme Court has upheld this argument.

confederation and still serves as its basic servatives have condemned the Trudeau plan as an arrogant bid to centralize power in Canada. The provincial governments are mostly Conservative.

When the Liberals announced two weeks ago they planned to cut off debate, the Conservatives launched into a filibuster, unusual in Canada, raising points of order by the score.

Last week the two major parties finally agreed on a plan to end the filibuster, but an angry Trudeau commented afterward that there had been "an element of fascism" in the opposition's attempt to stifle Parliament. The remark further embittered the national debate.

Under the parliamentary agreement, the House of Commons will suspend the discussion next week and await a decisive ruling by the Supreme Court of Canada in late May or early June on the Trudeau package.

If the court rules in Trudeau's favor, Parliament will hold two more days of debate and then finally ask the British Parliament to act.

'Watercolor' animation flaws movie, yet fable retains effective message

Collegian Reviewer

Many of George Orwell's written works have a cinematic feel about them. However, this isn't meant to imply that just anyone could successfully translate his literature to the screen. The ill-fated "1984" was a substantial failure.

Collegian review

"Animal Farm," Orwell's last work, is limited to the media of animation. It would have been tempting for a filmmaker to allow the limitations of animation to overwhelm the story. Since "Animal Farm" is a fable and deals with animals, it is suprising that the producers didn't settle for a Walt Disney-type adaptation.

The animation firm of Halas and Batchelor undertook the project with the goal of retaining most of Orwell's story. The allegory of a communist utopia and its faults are rendered somewhat effectively.

There are problems, however. Much of the film is visually comparable to a watercolor picture. This is unfortunate because Napoleon's (a pig, who is the star of the show) dictatorial reign, with all of it's passionless purges, is somehow seen as less horrifying.

as Orwell saw it, is that a communist utopia is admirable. However he also felt that human nature is sure to take a course that leads to a society in which "all animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others."

Another problem arises with this vision. It tends to be as myopic in scope as some of the opponents of Marx have accused. The simplistic portrayal comes across as a John Birch Society pamphlet.

Ukranian eggs add delicate beauty to Easter

Elaine Cole paints a goose egg with bees wax. The egg will be dyed a color and the wax removed, leaving a white line underneath.

By KYM FEESE Collegian Reporter

A delicate folk-art, which originated in the Ukraine region of the Soviet Union, has manifested itself in Manhattan.

This folk-art, Ukrainian eggs, has been offered as a class at University for Man for the past several years.

Ukrainian eggs are intricately decorated in a special waxing and dyeing process. The designs on each egg have some type of Christian or pagan meaning.

Orysia Dawydiak, a graduate student in animal science, has taught the class since color and the design is scratched upon it with small knife or needle.

The most primitive form of an Easter egg is called the "krashanka." It is painted one color with no decoration.

Decorators, referred to as "pysancharky" in the Ukraine, used to prepare the dyes themselves. Yellow was sometimes made from buckwheat husks while red was made from deer horn or sandalwood. Green was prepared from a mixture of sunflower seeds, wild elderberries, dark red or black hollyhock and bush anemones. Black was made from the husks of sunflower seeds, the spring of 1977. Dawydiak learned the art from her mother who is Ukrainian.

"I learned (how to paint the eggs) when I was six years old," Dawydiak said.

DAWYDIAK'S PARENTS were both born in the Ukraine. In 1951, they moved to Canada, where they still live.

Elaine Cole, another instructor, has been teaching the UFM class for about three Cole, who learned the art from a Czechoslovakian woman, moved to Manhattan 3½ years ago. She said she "thought getting involved with UFM would be a good way to get to know people."

Cole called UFM to ask about teaching a Ukranian egg class but "they said they already had somebody (Dawydiak) to teach it"

Someone at UFM suggested she call Dawydiak and they now teach the class together.

"We've been good friends ever since," Cole said. "It's easier having two people teach the class because of all the dyes and other things you have to cart around."

According to the book "Ukraine: A Concise Encyclopedia," the most common technique of coloring the eggs is called the "batikova" technique. This is the technique taught in the UFM class.

The decorator uses a "kytska", a wooden stick with a funnel-shaped piece of metal attached to the end of it. The "kytska" is dipped in wax and the drawing is made in thin lines on the surface of the egg.

PARTS OF THE EGG which are to remain white are covered with wax. The egg is then placed in a cold yellow dye. Parts of the design which are to remain yellow are covered with wax and the process continues in this manner. So each part of the decoration is to remain a particular color is covered with wax and the egg is dipped in the next darkest color.

In some places, the egg is painted one sulphate of iron, young leaves of the black maple and sometimes two or three dark periwinkles

Some dyes used today are toxic, according to Cole, and the eggs cannot be eaten once they have been dyed.

FOOD COLORING can be used as a dye, Dawydiak said, but the colors will not be as bright.

Dawydiak used to extract dye by pouring boiling water over crepe paper.

There are an indefinite number of designs which can be used on the eggs, Cole said.

"The combination of original designs is unlimited," Cole said.
"Ukraine: A Concise Encylopedia"

"Ukraine: A Concise Encylopedia" claims the oldest designs were of an ideographic nature. The principle motifs were symbols of the sun: The swastika, tripod, rose and star.

These symbols are still commonly used, along with others, and have various meanings.

The sun symbolizes the source of light or life. The heart symbolizes love and the bird symbolizes spring or good luck.

Easter eggs with crosses have purely Christian significance, but in general they are not very widespread.

One important goemetric element is the endless line or "bezkonechnyk." This is a wavy line which arises from the joining of several concentric circles and is continued in the direction of the following circle. The name comes from the continuous nature of the form, which proceeds forward in many curves and without any visible ending.

ANIMAL FORMS are also used. Hen's feet or tracks are common and in one area of the Ukraine the deer and the rooster are very popular, Dawydiak said.

Almost no human figures are found.

Each element of the egg design is symetrically arranged on the surface of the egg on the constructivist principle; the surface is divided into two, four or eight equal parts.

Some women, such as Dawydiak's mother, know more than 100 different patterns.

"They (the patterns) get passed around from person to person," Dawydiak said.

Dawydiak talked about learning to paint the eggs when she was six.

"I remember it being fun," Dawydiak recalled. "For our parents it was more serious."

The eggs were put in a basket with some cheese, plain hard-boiled eggs, horse-radish and other foods, she said. The basket was then taken to the church on Easter Sunday, placed on the altar and blessed by the priest. After the service, the congregation broke the Easter morning fast by eating some of the blessed food.

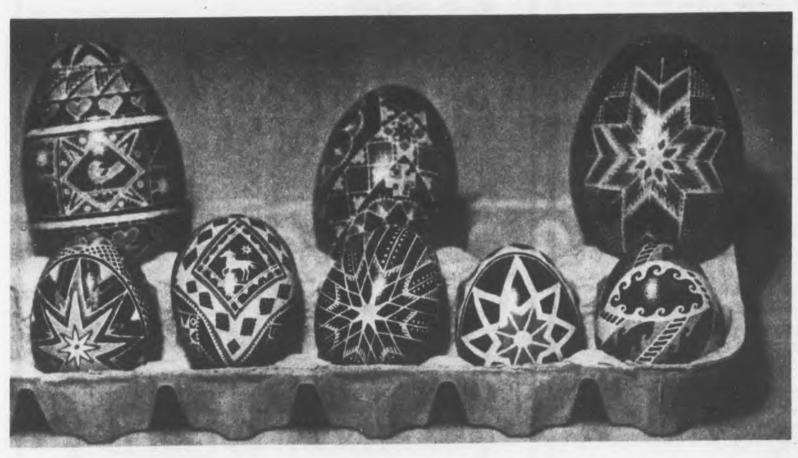

THE PAINTED EGGS were merely for decoration and Dawydiak said it became a kind of competition to see who's eggs were the prettiest.

According to the encyclopedia, the Easter egg was said to possess magic power in folk supersitition.

Cattle were given drinking water containing shells of Easter eggs to protect them from disease. Shells were also sprinkled on roofs of people's homes to protect them from thunder, wind and fire.

Ukrainian eggs seem to be for those who want to see a finished product in a short time. Dawydiak said a simple design can be completed in two hours.

"I like (painting) eggs because they're fast whereas embroidery or painting a picture takes a long time," Dawydiak said.

Snuff dippers continue pinch; cancer threat isn't a deterrent

By LEANN HODGES Collegian Reporter

A pinch is all is takes.

This is a popular slogan for snuff, and for some, a "pinch" means relaxation and satisfaction. But according to a recent Associated Press article appearing in the Collegian that "pinch" may be giving its "dipper" cancer.

"I know people who have chewed for a long time and have never gotten lip cancer," Carroll Middleton, senior in animal science said. Middleton said that the article on lip cancer didn't change his mind about

"I chew while I'm studying at night," Middleton said, "I also chew while I'm working."

Middleton has chewed for six years and said he has no intention of quiting.

"In this age group (college students) it's not really a problem." Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said in reference to lip cancer. Tout said he did believe there was a nationwide increase in lip cancer victims in the past year.

SOME PEOPLE attribute the increase in snuff dippers to the urban cowboy craze and will chew despite any warnings it may cause

"I think people will do it as long as they think that it is in," Dan Ball, freshmen in animal science, said. Middleton also believes that the media has had a lot to do with the increase.

"I thought that the Collegian article was interesting because it dealt with my habit," Ball said. Ball started chewing seven years ago and said he tried it because his boss chewed Skoal.

"I thought that the article was funny," Jim Templeton, junior in animal science, said. "The article didn't change my mind on chewing."

Templeton started chewing seven years ago and said he started because "everyone else was doing it." Templeton started while he was in high school and said he favored chewing while he was working and after

NOT ONLY MEN chew, many women also enjoy snuff.

"I started dipping because I quit smoking," an anonymous source referred to as Mary said, "I never got sick nor did I ever worry about getting lip cancer."

Mary has stopped chewing now because of peer pressure. Mary chewed for three years, then some of her friends talked her into quiting.

Mary has friends that chewed, too, yet most of them like her have quit.

I enjoyed chewing but I quit because my teammates talked me into quiting," one of Mary's friends, Jane, who also wishes to remain anonymous, said.

"It's a bad habit," Jane said, "I wouldn't advise anyone to start.

MANY PEOPLE add beer or liquor to their snuff when it becomes dry. The liquor also makes the snuff "potent stuff" according to a female high school teacher, who once dipped snuff but quit because of peer

The women who dipped snuff and would allow an interview did so under the condition that their names wouldn't be used. They did this to avoid the hassle of being "harped at," Jane said.

"The peer pressure is greater from girls to quit than it is from guys," Mary said.

Taking that pinch may increase the risks of getting lip cancer and it may make some people think twice about dipping but after examining other hazards of life, some don't find chewing that dangerous.

"Coffee, breathing and even living causes cancer anymore," Middleton said.

INTERSESSION May 18-June 5, 1981

INTERSESSION: A GOOD TIME TO BE ON CAMPUS

The three-week Intersession period in May and June offers over 35 credit courses to students and the public. It is a chance to study one subject in depth and to explore topics or environments not covered during the regular semesters. It's a good time to be on campus—no crowds, easy parking, and no pressures from other courses. Intersession is productive and enjoyable for students and faculty alike—consider it, and if this publication doesn't answer your questions, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566. Courses held on May 25 (Memorial Day) will be left to the discretion of the instructor.

REGISTRATION

Intersession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary.

Registration will be held April 27-29 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in the K-State Union's Main Concourse. Additional registrations will be accepted at 317 Umberger Hall from April 30 through May 15. Course fees are due at the time of enrollment. On Wednesday, May 6, at 8:00 a.m., a decision will be posted as to which courses have enough enrollments to "go," based on the number of registrations recorded during the first week of registration. The go/drop information will be posted near the Information Desk at the K-State Union and will be available from the Continuing Education Registrar's Office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students are asked to check with their advisors to ensure that the Intersession class will meet degree requirements.

P.S.: REGISTER EARLY!!

Although registrations in "go" classes may be accepted until the first day of Intersession, students are encouraged to register during the April 27-29 registration period at the K-State Union. The decision as to which classes will "go" is based on the enrollments recorded during that period. Delays in student registration could result in a course being cancelled unnecessarily—it is the students' responsibility to indicate their interest in a class by registering as soon as possible for it.

COSTS

Costs are $20 per undergraduate ("UG") credit hour and $30 per graduate ("G") credit hour; these costs are the same for Kansas residents and non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected by the Continuing Education Registrar at registration or by the instructor at the first class meeting. Lab fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been made (May 6), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

LATEFEE

Students enrolling after the third class meeting but before the close of Intersession will be charged a late fee of $10 and must have written permission from the instructor. Students attempting to enroll after an Intersession class is finished may do so with written permission from the instructor, and they will be charged a late fee of $20.

CREDIT

Classes are offered for one, two or three resident credit hours. This reflects a deans' ruling of one credit maximum per 15-hour week of Intersession instruction. The maximum credit enrolled is four (4) hour per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than four credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS SHOULD SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON A A-PASS-FAIL BASIS AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION AND SIGN-UP FOR A-PASS-FAIL MUST BE DONE BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED. Intersession grades count with G.P.A.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class(es) have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. The student must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or ADD.

REFUNDS

A full refund is made if the withdrawal request is received before the second class meeting, or if the class is cancelled. One-half of the fee is refunded if the withdrawal request is received after the second class meeting, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. No refund is permitted if the withdrawal request is received after one-third of the class meetings. All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Registrar, Continuing Education (not to the instructor). No refunds will be given after the class begins, for those taking the course for non-credit. Those lab and materials fee collected at registration will not be refunded after May 6 except for courses which have been cancelled.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's at the start of Intersession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

Shop around: Life insurance coverage costs, benefits vary considerably, says local professor

Collegian Reporter

Students who buy life insurance could be involved in "one of the biggest rip-offs on campus," according to Pat McDermott, instructor of family economics.

To help students understand life insurance, McDermott led a consumer nooner on the subject Wednesday afternoon in the Students are susceptible to the sales pitch, "'you're going to be graduating from college and need life insurance'," McDermott said, because students may believe everyone needs insurance after college.

Most students don't need to buy insurance when they graduate, McDermott said, "unless someone is dependent on them for their livelihood, if they have some outstanding debts or to provide for funeral expenses."

When students consider buying life insurance, they must first decide if there is anyone they need to provide for and leave money to, McDermott said.

If students decide they need insurance, they should predict how much money their dependents would need, subtract present assets, then buy a policy for that amount, McDermott said.

STUDENTS SHOULD BE cautious when buying a life insurance policy from an agent, McDermott said.

"Don't buy from the first salesman that comes to your door, don't buy from your relative. Shop around."

Students who don't yet need insurance are often sold the "wrong type and wrong size," McDermott said.

There are two types of insurance, term and cash-value. Term insurance only provides protection. Cash-value combines protection with a savings element.

Depending on the age of the policy holder, cash-value premiums (the amount paid yearly) can be seven to 10 times more than a term policy of comparable coverage.

McDermott said he believes students should buy convertible (insurance that can be converted to cash value if the policy

RS-2505

By STARR LEE holder wishes) renewable term insurance.

CASH-VALUE INSURANCE attracts students because of the "savings element" involved, McDermott said.

But despite the lure of saving money and receiving interest, the average 1979 return of a cash-value policy in the first five years was the face value of the policy, minus 8.36 percent, according to a 1979 Federal Trade Commission (FTC) report. Within the first 20 years, the average return of savings was 4.12 percent, which is still less than interest offered in a savings account at any bank.

"You'd do better if you bought term insurance, take the difference you would have paid for the cash-value (policy of same facevalue or coverage) and put it in the bank. You'd get 51/4 percent interest."

SALESMEN PUSH the cash-value policies because their commission is seven times higher than for the sale of term policy. McDermott said.

In 1979, the FTC reported the average first-year commission saleman received $273 on the sale of an average cash-value policy of $20,000. This is about $13 per $1,000 of insurance.

The FTC also found that the average firstyear commission on the average term policy of $46,000 was $98 or about $2 per $1,000 of insurance

The average insurance policy sold in 1979 was for $35,000, according to the FTC. McDermott said the average person is under-insured.

Present figures estimate it costs $65,000 to $85,000 to raise a child to age 18, McDermott said.

"Sometimes you have to sacrifice to cover insurance to make sure it will take care of the kids," he said. "It's been predicted (by a Los Angeles Times study) that by 1990 it will cost $60,000 just for a person to go to college.

"It would be economic suicide to purchase an insurance policy without shopping for the best. You wouldn't believe the difference in prices."

"The difference between cash-value policies of $100,000 for a lifetime can be as much as $33,000 (in premiums paid)," McDermott said, "and the difference between $100,000 term polices in a lifetime can amount to as much as $13,000."

Washington Post, Cooke relinquish Pulitzer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington Post reporter Janet Cooke relinquished the Pulitzer Prize and resigned from the newspaper Wednesday after acknowledging that her story of an 8-year-old heroin addict was not true.

Executive Editor Benjamin Bradlee told the Pulitzer Prize board that Cooke had determined she could not accept the prize, announced Monday, because her story was a composite, "the quotes attributed to the child were in fact fabricated" and events she claimed to have witnessed did not occur.

Bradlee also told a meeting of Post editors and reporters what had happened.

"She told Post editors early this morning that her story...was, in fact, a composite, that the quotes attributed to a child were, in fact, fabricated, and that certain events described as eyewitnessed did not, in fact, happen," Bradlee said in his statement to the Pulitzer board.

He said Cooke, 26, had offered her resignation and that "it has been accepted."

BRADLEE SAID HE issued the statement "with great sadness and regret."

Cooke, who joined the Post in December 1979 after working for the Toledo (Ohio) Blade, could not be reached for comment.

Within a day after the award was announced, questions were raised about the academic credentials attributed to Cooke in a biographical sketch issued by the Pulitzer board.

She told The Associated Press on Tuesday that the sketch was accurate although officials of two colleges disputed it.

In New York, a spokesman for Columbia University, which awards the prizes upon the recommendation of the Pulitzer Prize board, said the board would have no immediate comment on the Star's story.

"It's not right for us to comment at this point," said Fred Knubel, the university spokesman. "We've received no official word on it."

IT WAS BELIEVED there was only one previous case in which a prize, once awarded, was changed. That was in 1978 when a picture taken by a free-lance photographer was submitted by United

Story of young heroin addict proven false

Press International as the work of a staffer through what was called "an honest mistake." When the error was discovered the board took the prize away and gave the $1,000 award to the free lancer.

In the story, Cooke told of watching the lover of the child's mother inject heroin into the boy's arm. The story was published at a time when an influx of high quality but cheap heroin on the streets of Washington had led to a surge in heroin use.

The police department tried to subpoena Cooke and editors of the Post in an effort to find the 8-year-old described in the article. The Post said it would refuse to cooperate with them on First Amendment grounds.

District Police Chief Burtell Jefferson said he had ordered a search for the boy.

AT ONE POINT, District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry said a psychiatrist with the city's Department of Human Services had counseled the child's mother.

Barry subsequently said he did not think "Jimmy" existed but was a composite of many children with drug problems.

Awarding of the Pulitzer to Cooke also set off a new round of controversy when various persons questioned her biographical sketch released by the Pulitzer committee at Columbia University in New York.

That sketch, which Cooke said was accurate on Tuesday after questions had been raised about it, identified her as a magna cum laude graduate of Vassar who had a masters degree from the University of Toledo and had studied at the Sorbonne in Paris.

However, Dixie Sheridan, assistant to the president and press secretary at Vassar, said Cooke attended the school for one year.

And Marty Clark, spokesman for the University of Toledo, said a check of the school's records showed Cooke graduated from Toledo with a bachelor's degree in English literature in August, 1976. He said there were no records at the school to indicate she had a master's degree from Toledo.

Unbeaten K-State soccer club sets sights on Big 8 tourney

By T.J. ELLIS Collegian Reporter

More than 180 players and coaches will gather at K-State's Memorial Stadium this weekend for the Big 8 Soccer Tournament.

This will be the first time K-State has hosted the Big 8 tournament, and the thought of it has coach Dennis Cook excited.

"This is really going to be a big deal for K-State soccer," Cook said. "Missouri is the defending Big 8 champion and they're always tough, but we beat them once earlier this semester in league play 2-1 in Kansas City, which should help us out tremendously. Colorado and Kansas are other teams that are really good this season but they more or less have stayed the same and we've gotten a lot better since the beginning of the season."

The season for the K-State soccer team consumes of two segments, fall and spring. The fall portion of the schedule consists of mostly non-conference games. The spring schedule has been filled mostly with Big 8 teams with a few non-conference games.

SO FAR THIS spring K-State is undefeated.

"We're in great shape going into the tournament," Cook said. "Right now we're leading the Big 8 and it looks like we have the race all wrapped because we've beat everybody at least once this semester. We're undefeated this semester so we should be the team to beat. Oklahoma State has really come up with a good squad, but you can't count anybody out right now. That's why it would really be good to get some fans out there; they would see some excellent soccer."

The K-State soccer team is led by Kurt Krusen, the leading scorer in the Big 8, and Akram Al-Ami, who Cook considers one of the Big 8's best goalies.

The Big 8 is one of few conferences in the NCAA that doesn't recognize soccer at an intercollegiate level. Right now K-State receives all of its funds from outside donations. For this to change, Cook said the soccer team has to keep winning and receive more fan support.

"Sports is kind of like economics," Cook said. "We need to get more fan support. The more fan support we receive and the more everybody shows interest in soccer, the more money we will receive. That's what we've lacked in the past—some really big things on campus to attract people."

ADMISSION TO THE Big 8 Soccer Tournament is free and 12 first-round games are scheduled from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday. Sunday's semifinal and consolation bracket games are set for 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., with the title game scheduled for 3 p.m.

K-State will begin first-round play Saturday at 10:30 a.m. against Nebraska, and will later play Colorado and Missouri, which is also in the same bracket as K-State.

Trophies will be awarded to first, second, and third-place teams and special awards will be presented for good sportsmanship and to the tournament's most valuable player.

Along with the soccer games, spectators will be treated to a parachuting exhibition at 9 a.m. Saturday.

Soccer club members converge on the ball during a practice drill.

'Cats sweep pair from Washburn; tie school record

The K-State softball team tied a school record Wednesday by sweeping Washburn in a college doubleheader at CiCo Park.

The two wins over the Ichabods from Topeka—5-1 in the first game and 5-2 in the second—give the women a 16-13 record, which ties the school record for most wins in a season.

With the score tied 1-1 going into the bottom of the fifth inning of the opener, K-State sophomore Tammy Totland hit her first home run of the season, a shot to right-center field that gave the Wildcats the lead for good.

After keeping Washburn off the scoreboard in the top of the sixth, K-State erupted in the bottom half of the inning for three runs to all but decide the issue.

Sherrie Johnston pitched the entire game and picked up the win for K-State. She gave up only five hits, and got all the offensive help she needed from Totland, who had two hits and three runs batted in.

In the second game, the Wildcats, loading the bases on three walks in the second inning, scored two runs on Julie Laughery's single to center that brought home Pat Howard and Deb Burdiek. It stayed that way until the bottom of the fourth inning when Totland singled to center field with the bases loaded to score Leslie McGinnis and Cathy Hinson, making the score 4-0.

That, for all practical purposes, was the game, although Washburn scored twice off winning pitcher Janel Anderson, who allowed only one hit and struck out two. Anderson, however, was wild, throwing three wild pitches.

Next up for K-State is a doubleheader today against Nebraska at 4 p.m. at CiCo

Davis, Robinson fuel Suns; 76ers, Spurs claim victories

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) - Guard Walter Davis scored 16 of his 20 points in a pivotal first half and veteran forward Len "Truck" Robinson grabbed 20 rebounds as the Phoenix Suns fought off elimination and defeated the Kansas City Kings 101-89 in Game five of their National Basketball Association playoff series Wednesday night.

The Phoenix victory cut Kansas City's lead to 3-2 in the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series. Game six is Friday night at Kansas City.

If Phoenix, which won 57 games during the regular season, can beat the Kings in Kansas City, the decisive seventh game will be in Phoenix Sunday afternoon.

After a see-saw first period which saw the score tied seven times, the Suns outscored Kansas City 19-2 over a five-minute stretch. It staked Phoenix to a commanding 47-31 lead with 3:42 left in the first half.

Davis, who scored 10 first period points, notched six more over that second quarter span as did rookie guard Kyle Macy. But a three-point play from Kansas City forward Reggie King-who had 15 points in the first half and 29 in the game-cut his team's deficit to 52-40 at intermission.

Four points apiece from Davis and fellow guard Dennis Johnson early in the third period pushed Phoenix up 60-48. King and center Sam Lacey, however, got Kansas City back to within seven, 66-59, with 3:35 left in the quarter.

Robinson's ensuing three-point play and layup gave the Suns a 73-63 lead entering the fourth quarter.

610

Back-to-back jumpers by Lacey and guard Scott Wedman left Kansas City trailing 79-69 with 8:05 remaining. But seven points from Macy and five by Robinson in a three-minute span made it 97-77 Phoenix and sealed the victory with 3:06 to play.

Macy finished with 17 points while Robinson had 15. For Kansas City, guard Ernie Grunfeld scored 21 and Wedman had 18.

Spurs 101, Rockets 96 HOUSTON (AP) — Swift San Antonio forward George Gervin hit a back-breaking.

Men's golf team travels to Wichita

K-State's men's golf team will be facing its toughest competition so far this year at the two-day Wichita Classic.

Two rounds of 18 holes will be played today, with the tournament concluding Friday with a single round.

Oklahoma State, last year's national champion, heads a field of 20 of the Midwest's best teams which will swing into action on the Wichita State golf course. Other entries include all Big 8 schools with the exception of Colorado, teams from the Missouri Valley Conference and Texas.

"Oklahoma State will probably win the thing," coach Ray Wauthier said. "They're the national power. Year in and year out they're the national leaders."

Making the trip for K-State's fourth meet of the year will be George Firney, John Carlson, Brad Johnson, Scott Johnson and Tracy Faulkner.

"I'm fairly pleased with the way we're shooting right now," Wauthier said, adding that the scores would be better if the team ever "played without 45 mile per hour winds."

The Spurs, facing elimination in the bestof-seven series, evened the playoffs at three games each with the decisive seventh game scheduled Friday in San Antonio.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Guards Maurice Cheeks and Lionel Hollins each scored 20 points and the Philadelphia 76ers repelled a final quarter rally to beat the Milwaukee Bucks 116-99 Wednesday night and take a 3-2 lead in their National Basketball Association Eastern Conference best-of-seven semifinal series.

Philadelphia gets a chance to close out the Bucks and enter the Eastern final against the Boston Celtics if they can win the sixth game of the series Friday night in

If the Bucks, the Central Division champs, win at home and tie the series, the deciding game would be played in Philadelphia

Sidney Moncrief and Mickey Johnson each had 20 points for the Bucks.

Track team pins hope on field event entrants

Collegian Reporter events.

The K-State men's track team, fresh from a first-place finish at the John Jacobs Invitational, will take part in the KU Relays today, Friday and Saturday in Lawrence.

The 56th edition of the KU Relays, the second stop on the Midwest Relays circuit (Texas, KU, Drake), officially began Wednesday with the running of the first five events of the men's decathlon and the first four events of the women's heptathlon.

The men, however, won't swing into action until today, and most of them will wait until Friday and Saturday—when the bulk of the meet will be run-to compete.

LEADING THE K-STATE entries will be a pair of guys in the field-shot put and discus man Ray Bradley and javelin thrower Joe Bramlage.

Bradley, who overcame a pulled hamstring to win the shot and discus last week in Oklahoma, has bests of 61-101/4 in the shot and 196-51/2 in the discus. If the mammoth weightman wins both titles this week, it will be the first time that has happened to a K-State performer at KU.

Bramlage, who has a 250-3 throw to his credit this year, will try to get his second gold on the relays circuit. Two weeks ago he won at Texas.

Also competing in the javelin for the Wildcats will be red-shirt transfer Ray Hansen, who will throw unattached because of NCAA eligibility rules. Hansen threw 267-8 last week, which would have been a K-State school record if he was an official member of the team.

THE BULK OF K-State's strength will come in the field, where the Wildcats have entries in seven different events.

Doug Lytle in the pole vault (17-0), Steve Cotton in the high jump (7-0), Veryl Switzer (25-4) and Rodney Brogden (24-101/2) in the long jump and Vince Parrette, the defending champion in the triple jump, will also

By T.J. ELLIS represent the school in their respective

On the track K-State will be entered in four relays-the four-mile relay on Friday, and the sprint medley, distance medley and mile relays on Saturday.

"I think we have a strong possibility of finishing in the top three in all four of those events," coach Mike Ross said. "We'd really like to get our mile relay time down to around 3:06.0 or 3:07.0."

If the Wildcats do, it will be a school record. The current record is 3:07.0, set back in 1971 at the Drake Relays.

A lot of attention will be focused on the 200meter dash, which will feature the top three finishers from the Olympic Trials. Oklahoma State's James Butler won the trials in 20.49, with former Kansas star Clifford Wiley second in 20.54 and Fred Taylor, who runs with the Philadelphia Pioneers, third in 20.70.

Seven individuals who won at Texas will be on hand this weekend attempting to gain win No. 2 in their pursuit of the triple crown in their respective events.

Rozema handcuffs KC in 4-0 Detroit victory

Rozema tossed a six-hitter in his 1981 debut the Toronto Blue Jays Wednesday night. Wednesday night and Al Cowens tripled home a run and scored to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 4-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Larry Gura, 0-2, gave up only seven hits as the defending American League champs suffered a two-game sweep by the Tigers.

Rick Peters doubled leading off the game and scored on Steve Kemp's sacrifice fly after Alan Trammell sacrificed him to third.

John Wockenfuss walked leading off the Tiger second. Then Cowens, a former Royal right fielder, slapped a Gura pitch into right that Cesar Geronimo let drop in front of him.

The ball bounced high over his head off the hard artificial surface and rolled to the wall. Cowens then scored Detroit's third run on Mick Kelleher's single.

Kemp singled home Lou Whitaker with Detroit's fourth run in the eighth. Whitaker singled leading off and was sacrificed to second by Peters.

Rangers 8, Indians 0

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - Designated hitter Al Oliver, mired in a 2-for-18 slump, knocked in three runs with a homer, double and a fielder's choice grounder Wednesday night to back the solid pitching of Doc Medich, and the Texas Rangers rolled to an 8-0 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Medich, making his first start of the year, scattered five hits through 713 innings before he tired in the eighth inning and yielded to reliever John Henry Johnson.

White Sox 5, Brewers 4

CHICAGO (AP) - Bobby Molinaro's pinch sacrifice fly in the eighth inning scored Harold Baines Wednesday to carry the Chicago White Sox to a 5-4 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Baines opened the eighth with his third single of the game, went to second on a sacrifice by Jim Morrison and took third on Tony Bernazard's bunt single before Molinaro delivered his fly off loser Rollie Fingers, 0-1.

Red Sox 7, Orioles 2

BOSTON (AP) - Veteran Carl Yastrzemski drove in three runs in his 1981 American League debut and Tony Perez hit a wind-blown two-run homer as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Baltimore Orioles 7-2 Wednesday:

The 41-year-old Yastrzemski, who missed his first season opener in 21 years because of back muscle spasms last week, drove in Boston's first run with a ground out in the first inning and then lined a two-run single in the fourth for his 3,110th major league hit.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO (AP) - Oscar Gamble's solo homer and Dave Winfield's two-run single keyed a five-run fourth inning that carried the New York Yankees to a 6-3 victory over

NATIONAL LEAGUE Mets 5, Cardinals 3

NEW YORK (AP) — Doug Flynn singled home two runs and Mookie Wilson tripled in two more in the Mets' four-run second inning and New York went on to a 5-3 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday.

Flynn's single followed a walk, a single by Rusty Staub and an error by second baseman Tommy Herr, one of five St. Louis miscues in the Mets' home opener.

Then pitcher Pat Zachry sacrificed, moving runners to second and third, before Wilson delivered his triple to deep leftcenter, giving the Mets a 4-0 lead.

The Cardinals scored two runs off Zachry in the third inning on doubles by Silvio Martinez, Garry Templeton and Keith Hernandez.

Zachry, 2-0, pitched 513 innings, allowing five hits while walking three and striking out five. Tom Hausman replaced Zachry and threw one pitch in the sixth, coaxing a doubleplay ball.

Expos 5, Cubs 4

MONTREAL (AP) - Gary Carter singled home Andre Dawson from third base to cap a two-run rally in the eighth inning as the Montreal Expos opened their 13th home season with a 5-4 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Wednesday.

Astros 2, Braves 0

HOUSTON (AP) - Nolan Ryan and Frank LaCorte outdueled Tommy Boggs to lead the Houston Astros to a 2-0 victory over the Atlanta Braves Wednesday night.

Phillies 4, Pirates 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Gary Matthews' leadoff home run off Enrique Romo in the bottom of the 11th inning gave the Philadelphia Phillies a 4-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Wednesday night.

Regatta cancelled

EL DORADO (AP) - The Lake Bluestem-El Dorado Thunderboat Regatta Committee has cancelled this year's unlimited hydroplane races at Lake Bluestem.

Board of Education to pursue student grade, test standards

TOPEKA (AP) — The state Board of Education voted Wednesday to proceed with development of a program requiring students wanting to pursue an education curriculum to become teachers to have at least a 2.5 grade average on a 4-point system and to pass a proficiency test.

However, the 10-member board rejected on a 5-3 vote a proposal that those graduating from education programs at Kansas colleges and universities take and pass proficiency examinations in order to be certified to teach in this state.

There were four bills before the 1981 session of the Legislature to require new teachers to take and pass such examinations before they could be certified to teach. None made it out of committee.

Also rejected by the state board was a proposal that new teachers be certified initially for just one year.

IN EFFECT, THAT would put them on probation until they could be evaluated by school administrators, and they wouldn't have their certificates to teach renewed if they received low evaluations.

Institution of the grade and test requirements on prospective education students before they would be admitted to education curricula is at least two years off, said L.C. Crouch, assistant state education commissioner for education services.

He said rules and regulations still must be developed and hearings held before the requirements would be put into effect.

Crouch said there is no timetable for implementation of the requirements.

PRESENTLY, STUDENTS need only make passing grades in their freshman and sophomore courses to be accepted into education schools at Kansas colleges and

Kansas won't lose highway funding

TOPEKA (AP) — Although more motorists in Kansas apparently are ignoring the 55 mph speed limit, the state is still not likely to lose any federal highway funding because of its noncompliance with the law.

Thanks to a new calculation supplied by the federal government to compensate for speedometer error, Kansas is close to meeting a mandate for having at least 50 percent of its motorists complying with the speed limit during a 12-month period ending in October.

If the state fails to reach that goal, it is in danger of losing 10 percent of its federal highway funds, about $4.5 million.

The Kansas Department of Transportation recently finished its quarterly monitoring period for speed limit compliance and found that 37.1 percent of motorists were obeying the law. That's a slight dip from the 37.9 percent compliance from the three-month period just before, October-December 1980.

But calculated to compensate for speedometer variation, the last quarter produced 48.4 percent compliance, said Clarence Startz, traffic support engineer for K-DOT. The prior quarter, using the federal calculation, had 49.5 percent compliance.

TOPEKA (AP) — The state Board of universities. On a 4-point scale, a 2.5 grade ducation voted Wednesday to proceed with average is equal to B-minus or C-plus.

The staff of the state Education Department will decide which basic skills should be tested and develop a test to give those students who seek to enter education courses of study.

As part of its program to upgrade qualifications of new teachers, the state board also directed that the department improve its system for evaluating teacher education programs at state schools.

As the state board concluded its regular April meeting Wednesday, it also adopted a position on the independence of local school districts in setting their own curricula.

THE HEART OF THE position statement

"In fulfilling its mission, it is not the intent of the state Board of Education to infringe upon the prerogative of local boards to develop curriculum content and methodology.

"The decision to include or exclude material in the curriculum should be based exclusively on educational need.

"However, the state Board of Education does encourage local boards of education to improve their systems of communication to react to ideas and concerns among all elements of the educational community—students, parents, teachers, board members, administrators and citizens at large."

The state Department of Education's staff will continue to provide technical assistant, when asked by local school districts, in developing curricula, picking instructional material, conducting research and making needs assessments, however, the statement added.

Teachers' unions urge faculty to organize

By JILL SHELLEY Staff Writer

EMPORIA — University faculty members must organize in order to have enough political clout to get legislation passed that is favorable to higher education, according to Louis Bolieu, assistant to the president of United Texas Faculty.

Bolieu presented the advantages of belonging to the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) at a meeting Thursday of faculty senate representatives from the regents' institutions.

Other union representatives who spoke to the group were Judith Johnson of the American Association University Professors (AAUP), Lee Quisenberry of Kansas-National Education Association (K-NEA) and Ward Symons of the National Education Association (NEA).

"The time for the option of staying out of the political process is past," Bolieu said. "We must discover ways to elect pro-faculty, pro-higher education people at all levels of government, especially in state legislatures."

Organized faculty groups have been able to push their programs through the legislatures, he said.

Faculty members can't afford to its involvement, Symons said. differ on issues such as tenure, Bolieu said.

"We need to speak to the Legislature with one voice," he QUISENBERRY, K-NEA higher education coordinator, and Symons, NEA organizational specialist, also stressed the need for political involvement with the regents, state legislatures and faculty senates.

"Right now everything is controlled by special interest groups," Symons said. "We must muster

One key to gaining political strength is to build strong faculty senates, he said.

"Most key administrators are coming out of the business community and are concerned with budgets. Faculty senates must put together organizations to deal with this on a campus level," Symons

K-NEA represents 80 faculty members at Pittsburg State University and was involved in contract negotiations there, Symons said. Working conditions have improved at Pittsburg since Quisenberry said he believes there may be some restrictions of individual faculty members being involved with the Legislature.

"If you work only through the campus lobbyist, the only voice the Legislature hears is that of the administration," Quisenberry AAUP HAS testified before the Kansas Legislature, Johnson said. Tenure is especially under attack in legislatures, she said.

"Legislators have two basic needs: To be re-elected and to be respected," Johnson said. "They are different in that they know anytime anyone wants to talk with them, they want something. If the proposal benefits them and their state, the legislators will probably vote for it."

AAUP emphasizes academic freedom, tenure, grievance procedures, early retirement and other non-economic issues, Johnson said.

"We insist people are more important than buildings," she said. "During negotiations, we insist on discussing non-economic

THERE IS much interest in early retirement, Johnson said. The combination of retirement pay and hiring an instructor with lower rank is less costly than retaining an experienced professor. Early retirement also benefits faculty and students by bringing in new ideas.

"It allows professors to leave who are no longer excited but formerly could not afford to do so," Johnson said.

AAUP procedures are used at K-

The representatives of all three unions pointed out that collective bargaining is not required by their organizations.

Charles Hathaway, K-State Faculty Senate president and head of the Department of Physics, said he does not expect the faculty members to take any steps toward unionization this spring.

Regents call budget session to discuss cuts, tuition hike

EMPORIA (AP) — The question is not whether most Kansas college students will be paying higher tuition next fall-but how

A committee of the Kansas Board of Regents discussed the issue Thursday at Emporia State University and plans another meeting Friday before the full board decides the matter later in the day.

The regents called a special session of the Budget and Finance Committee Thursday to deal with funding cutbacks at the federal and state level and the Legislature's mandate to raise income from tuition by 15 percent. Regents must decide whether to make the increase across the board or weight it more heavily for nonresident students.

Center creates committee after APO protests actions

Collegian Reporter A protest by the former director of Alpha Phi Omega (APO) has resulted in the formation of a committee to oversee the "missions" of organizations within the Center for Student Development.

semester, APO, a service fraternity, sponsored the "Beauty and the Beast" contest to raise money for the Regional Crisis Center. Photographs, described by protesters as "sexist," were used in the charity event.

A protest led by the Women's Resource Center (WRC) over the nature of the photographs evolved from the contest, and resulted in the distribution of WRC literature the contest's protesting photographs.

APO posters promoting "Beauty and the Beast" were defaced during the controversy.

Because there are no University guidelines for formally protesting groups' activities, there was no recourse for APO, said Ellen Johnson, senior in nuclear engineering and APO president at the time of the contest.

AS A RESULT of the protest, APO members Johnson and Monica Haley, senior in general home economics, filed a grievance against WRC with Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development. The grievance was an appeal to establish guidelines for how and when WRC should be allowed to protest, Johnson said.

Johnson's actions resulted in the formation of a committee to spell out the "missions of the organizations under the Center for Student Development," said Chet Peters, vice president for Student Affairs. The committee will also have the responsibility of establishing protest guidelines for groups under the Center for Student Development.

The committee will review the purpose of WRC, but will not be singling out any organization, Peters said.

"The formation of the committee is definitely a result of Ellen's concern," Peters said.

The committee will be composed of five persons: Fred Newton, associate professor of student development; Frankie Felder, instructor of student development; Margaret Nordin, associate director of student development; Ronald Downey, associate professor of student development; and Scot Stubenhofer, junior in chemical science and arts and sciences student senator.

THE GRIEVANCE filed by Johnson and Haley stated, "We feel that the objection of the Women's Resource Center against the Beauty and the Beast Contest of Alpha Phi Omega was not carried out in a professional manner. We believe this protest was done in a destructive rather than constructive manner."

After reviewing the grievance, Nolting and Mark Zimmerman, senior in marketing and Student Senate chairman at the time the grievance was filed, concluded "that students and university related organizations should be mindful that they operate in an education context, and not a political environment. Every effort must be made by all concerned to respond to differences of opinion intellectually and rationally rather than emotionally or politically."

WRC IS FUNDED jointly by Student Senate with student fees and the Center for Student Development. The group currently receives about 20 percent of its funding from the Student Governing Association and about 80 percent from the Center for Student Development, Nolting

"If my money is going to be used for that (WRC), I want the people in charge to be more responsible," Johnson said. "I would like to see more guidelines for WRC. At present, the guidelines allow them too much freedom."

Johnson has taken the protest further by challenging the legitimacy of the existence of

She said she sent a letter to the Kansas Legislature, protesting the use of student funds for WRC. She said she believes the Legislature should know "what's really going on" with the money at K-State.

Cathy Stackpole, director of WRC, said the issue should have been dropped after the grievance was filed. Members of WRC are "not doing anything" to continue the controversy, she said.

"There are people who are pissed but don't want to be vindictive," Stackpole said. "I think it's really sad that women are fighting against each other at this

ALTHOUGH JOHNSON says APO supports her protest, she said she's "keeping the APO name out of" the letters she wrote to Peters and the Legislature.

Pat Glensor, current president of APO and junior in horticulture therapy, said although many APO members support Johnson, the

"We must face up to the fact that the Legislature appropriated less than the governor recommended, and that he recommended less than we requested," said Glee Smith of Larned, the committee chairman.

SMITH SAID the regents have used a guideline since the mid-1960s calling for students to pay 25 percent of the cost of education, excluding capital improvement, research and extension costs. "We've used this very consistently, but it is a goal that has never been reached. Students have never been asked to pay the 25 percent. The highest their share has ever been is around 22 percent," he said.

Smith said the board also has tried to limit tuition and fee increases to once every three or four years to ensure that a student would have only one increase during four years of undergraduate study. He noted that a 91/2 percent increase went into effect last fall.

"When the increase came around last year, we were under President Carter's price control guidelines. With the removal of those restraints, it's necessary for us to catch up and it would have been necessary even without the Legislature's interest in seeing fees raised."

REGENT JORDAN HAINES of Wichita said tuition accounts for only a small portion of the cost of education-about $40 million of a total $475 million budget.

"We can't have the finest quality education if we don't pay for it," Haines said. "I don't feel it is our duty to represent the students, and it's not our duty to represent the faculty. Our duty is to provide the highest level of education and get the best return on the tax dollars spent by Kansans."

Members of the Student Advisory Council, made up of student government representatives from each of the colleges, told the board they planned to draw up a recommendation for a reasonable tuition increase. They said they would seek assurances that increased fees would be used for faculty salaries and to improve the quality of education.

Current tuition and fees vary at the seven colleges. The per-semester charge at K-State is $382 for residents and $922 for nonresidents; $385.60 and $925.60 at KU; $391 and $931 at Wichita State: $290.25 and $615.25 at Pittsburg State; $304.50 and $629.50 at Emporia State; $345 and $671.25 at Fort Hays State; and $172.50 and $472.50 at the Kansas Technical Institute.

Johnson said she plans to talk to K-State President Duane Acker on Monday about the necessity of WRC.

"I want to make him aware that I'm still very, very upset about it," she said. "I get the feeling that they're hoping I'll just forget about it and it will be dropped.

"Why am I still fighting it? It's the principle of the whole matter," she said.

The issue of the Beauty and the Beast contest has overshadowed the good done by WRC, Nolting said.

"They have a lot to offer," he said.

Pre-enrollment begins Tuesday

Pre-enrollment for the 1981 fall semester will begin Tuesday at 8:15 a.m. and extend through May 1.

Students are scheduled to pre-enroll according to classification in the basement of Farrell Library. Students may pre-enroll from 8:15 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. each weekday.

Students should pre-enroll as closely as possible to their scheduled days to avoid full classes and long waiting lines, Donald Foster, university registrar, said.

Approximately 12,000 students are expected to pre-enroll, which is about the same number as last year, Foster said.

If a student cannot pre-enroll during his scheduled time, he may enroll in the fall, Foster said. He may also contact the Office of Admissions and enroll during the summer. However, classes are often filled and selection is limited at that time, he said.

Man pulls town positions 'out of hat'

ANNAWAN, III. — Earl Vandemore won two town offices on the same day in separate drawings in which his name was picked from a hat.

The 64-year-old Vandemore said he "sure got a lot of ribbing," but, "there were no hard feelings because you can't have too many enemies in a small town like this."

In an April 7 election, Vandemore tied with Elsie Ball for fourth place in a field of six candidates seeking four township board seats. And he deadlocked with William Comp for third place out of six candidates for three village board posts.

Vandemore, a state highway maintenance man, won both seats Tuesday in this community of 900 residents near Moline when his name was chosen in separate drawings.

"It's just one of those things that's happened, that's all," Ball, 67, said. "The state's attorney office told me that picking out of a hat is the legal way to settle a tie here.

TOPEKA — The last tenant of Topeka's historic Jayhawk Hotel left peacefully before a noon deadline Thursday, avoiding a confrontation with a contractor who is converting the building to office space Workers said a woman who identified herself as Mrs. Dorothy Wing had refused to move and often hid from workers who were busy renovating the seven-story hotel.

Tom Corcoran of B.A. Development Co., contractors for the renovation, said Wednesday that if Mrs. Wing refused to leave, she would be evicted at noon and could face trespass charges based on an eviction notice filed in Shawnee County District Court.

The hotel—once the headquarters of the Kansas Republican Party—has been closed since April 2 for renovations. Long-term tenants, many of them elderly, were notified in January that they would have to move by April 1.

Jinxed government yacht for sale again

SAN FRANCISCO — The Potomac, the former presidential yacht that was seized with more than 21 tons of marijuana aboard, is up for sale again.

U.S. District Judge William Schwarzer ordered Wednesday that the 165-foot vessel be sold by the government because its expense is "disproportionate to its value."

No date was set for sale of the vessel, which was seized last September at a San Francisco pier. Federal officials said it had been used to transport marijuana and was subject to forfeiture.

The leaky yacht, once valued at $250,000, sank while moored at Treasure Island. It was refloated and put into drydock at a cost to the U.S. Customs Service of $470 a day.

Archbishop criticizes 'Christian' sub

HARTFORD, Conn. — Corpus Christi—Latin for "body of Christ"—is not an appropriate name for a fast-attack Navy nuclear submarine, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Hartford says.

Archbishop John Whealon said Wednesday the sub's warmaking capabilities make the name "inappropriate" and offensive to Catholics.

Navy officials said they had no plans to change the name of the submarine, which is scheduled for launch April 25 in Groton. The name Corpus Christi, in honor of the Texas Gulf Coast city, was chosen by Navy Secretary John Lehman. The Navy has named all its 688-class, fast-attack submarines after U.S. cities.

Senator urges action against 'Right'

INDIANAPOLIS — Former Sen. George McGovern, who lost his Senate seat in the 1980 election, said Thursday the best advice he has for congressmen targeted by conservative action groups is "start early.

"Don't assume that people aren't listening to them in April of 1981," the 1972 Democratic presidential nominee said during a news conference. "You can't take for granted that people are rejecting the most outlandish propaganda."

The liberal Democrat from South Dakota is the founder and chairman of Americans For Common Sense, a Washington-based organization designed to counter the influence of the New Right in American politics.

McGovern said he is devoting about half his time to work and speeches for Americans For Common Sense.

Opinions

The other half needs love too

A controversy concerning the Beauty and the Beast photo contest has subsequently resulted in complaints about the functions and purposes of the Women's Resource Center (WRC).

Recently a committee has been formed to examine the roles of groups under the Center for Student Development and their missions.

This is long overdue.

While conception of the WRC was perhaps inevitable because of the intensification of the women's rights movement in the 1970s, it was a mistake.

The organization only provides services for approximately half of the student body, and therefore cannot justify the requested allocation of approximately $1,300 for 1981-82.

It would have been more productive to have created a Human Resources Center that could not only serve the special needs of women, but act as a central resource organization for the changing human needs of the total student body.

The committee reviewing the organizations should seriously consider such a change in the now limited program.

Ridiculous column

RE: Damien Semanitzky's column, "Humans should have it so good.

The aforementioned article was so ridiculous that I am almost too embarrassed to respond to it. But someone has to defend the intelligence of the readers of the Collegian. Whereas last year Kopi insulted our sense of humor, Semanitzky now insults our intelligence.

How could anyone be serious in comparing the "putting to sleep" of an animal such as an owl to the practice of euthanasia in terminal cancer victims and quadriplegics? Small animals generally serve one purpose. The owl controls rodents and the like. Therefore, one could say that a flightless owl is useless, utterly useless.

But is a quadriplegic, whose mind can still function, utterly useless? No, he can still contribute to society by imparting knowledge and advice to others. In fact, in a recent divorce case, a state Supreme Court has given a quadriplegic father custody of his two sons instead of to the man's physically normal ex-wife.

Furthermore, a person who has recently lost the use of his bodily parts would be prone to making an irrational decision with respect to his life. In making a decision to "end it all," he is cheating himself out of time to peacefully come to grips with his situation in a dignified manner.

Finally, the effect on the family must be considered. For instance, imagine the emotional scars left on the quadriplegic's sons who I have mentioned, if their father had been encouraged by laws conding "taking the easy way out." The effect would have been devastating.

Raise your voices

Editor,

On April 23 and 24 Senate Judiciary subcommittees headed by John East of North Carolina and Orrin Hatch of Utah will hold hearings involving a bill known as the Human Life Statute. The bill is a move to reverse the 1973 Supreme Court decision of a woman's constitutional right to a legal abortion.

The move is a very realistic and severe threat to the rights of women; the right to privacy; the right to control our own bodies and reproductive life; and the right to freedom and control of our own

It must be realized that these rights are being imminently threatened, and the time to voice opinions is now. I urge every concerned citizen to write a letter to your representatives in Congress. Let your opinions be heard. If we do not raise our voices in this battle now, it may be too

THAT'S FUNNY ... THE LOCK'S BEEN CHANGED ...

You deserve a greasy break today

There may be more than 50 restaurants in Manhattan, but as far as I'm concerned, only three cater to my needs. I'm one of those late-night breakfast junkies who likes to crash McDougal's about two hours past midnight.

To my knowledge, only Country Kitchen and Sambo's care to match McDougal's in soothing the Manhattan insomniac, and both are part of the national restaurant chain establishment I love to My complaint with chain restaurants is not an original one. The way I see it, once you've eaten at one Sambo's, you've eaten at them all. And for that matter, you've eaten at all the Country Kitchens and Denny's across the country too. Those restaurants have all been reduced to plastic corporate formulas that mirror one another.

Have it your way. You deserve a break today.

I SUPPOSE it could be argued that one greasy spoon varies little from the next. Each, it seems, has wood paneling on the walls and a Pepsi clock behind the counter. The tackiness is uniform.

The saving grace for greasy spoons is that they aren't intended to be alike. Back in the kitchen there is no three-ring binder that determines all the waitresses wear matching gingham jumpers. A corporate vice president in charge of water glasses hasn't established some sort of policy in triplicate in some far-away office. Oftentimes, the proprietor of the greasy spoon can be found on the premises.

He has to answer for the tasteless hamburger or the bitter coffee. Down the street at the chain restaurant, a semi dumps a load of foodstuffs at the backdoor each week. The same truck stops at the chain restaurant in Topeka, Lawrence and Kansas City and mediocre consistency reigns supreme.

THAT'S NOT to say the food at McDougal's is so great. It's not. But there is some comfort in knowing the eggs are fried the way they are because of a local decision.

My concern with the Manhattan downtown mall project is strictly personal. I fear that my breakfast shrine on Third Street will be dismanteled in favor of a Sears parking lot. If that comes to pass, the number of late-night eating establishments in Manhattan will be reduced by a third. Then the only breakfast choices available will be rubber eggs and flapjacks that disintegrate on contact with maple syrup.

However, in the spirit of fairness, I suppose the Country Kitchens and Sambos of this world do occupy some sort of niche. Otherwise they wouldn't be in business. Perhaps, since their seating capacity is greater than several McDougal's, more people are content with mediocrity than with tacky character.

Maybe there is a substantial population that prefers the loud oranges and yellows Sambo's decks itself out in to the drab greens that wrap McDougal's.

It could be that a slick menu that boasts a "Country Boy Special" is favored over a light in the corner that advertises biscuits and gravy.

The real issue here is, however, is one of comestibility-and not of the paper on which the menu is printed. It may be a greasy proposition to infiltrate that unsophisticated place of purveyance on Third Street.

But, after all, for a miniature late-night starbase, it's a little like

Federal tap turned off on area crisis center

By LESLIE FROST Collegian Reporter

She was raped in Manhattan last November. That night, in the hospital, she became aware of the Regional Crisis Center.

In June, the Regional Crisis Center will be needing assistance in order to provide help given to this victim and others like her.

Its annual federal grant, given through the Governor's Committee on Criminal Administration (GCCA), will run out on June 30

The Regional Crisis Center, established in 1979, deals primarily with victims of domestic violence and rape, Judy Davis, director of the center, said.

The grant that supports the center expired because in 1980, former President Jimmy Carter eliminated the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) where the GCCA receives its funding, according to Davis.

Davis does not forsee financial assistance in the social services area from the Reagan administration.

"I don't see a whole lot coming down for social services through the Reagan administration," she said. "What they're telling us is that they feel these are local problems and should be taken care of locally."

SHE SAID SHE is not opposed to that attitude, but worried that in some places the problems may be ignored instead of solved. Davis said that hasn't happened in Manhattan.

In the case of the rape victim, someone from the center came to the hospital to help her deal with her confusion and emotions, as well as giving a "little moral support," a victim, who asked not be identified, said.

1980 funds for the Crisis Center totaled about $30,000 from the GCCA. This amount was supplemented with $5,000 from the Big Lakes Regional Planning Council last year, Davis said.

The crisis center serves the five counties of the Big Lakes Regional Planning Council. It has 85 volunteer workers, Davis said.

The budget for the center is used to help women in the five-county area, Davis said. Forty percent of the clients are from Riley County, she said.

ALTHOUGH THE BIG LAKES Regional Planning Council will continue its support, the center is looking for other sources of funding to continue operation—the city of Manhattan, churches and local organizations, Davis said.

"We need some city funding," Davis said.
"We have the basic approval of the community. We just need to translate it in to dollars."

This year's budget is $42,000, Davis said. Next year's projected budget is for $67,000, which includes funds to operate a shelter for women.

A building has been found which will be rented for the shelter, Davis said. Ten months rent will be paid by a donation from College Avenue Methodist Church. The church voted to donate $5,000 for the rent, she said.

The present location of the crisis center is kept secret so battered women and crisis center workers cannot be hassled.

"I think there's a whole lot of people in this community who support the center," Davis said. "Everybody refers people to us. We are the only place (in this area) that does this. We'll make it somehow."

"I'D HATE TO lose them," said the woman who was raped in November. "I don't think I could have coped with the situation the way I did if I wouldn't have had them."

FBI statistics concerning rape and violent crime support the need for the crisis center, Davis said. One in four women in the Manhattan area will be raped in her lifetime, she said. Nationally, statistics show violent crime rose 17 percent in 1979 and rape statistics show the greatest increase, she said.

In 18 months, the Regional Crisis Center has handled 835 cases of rape, battered women and miscellaneous other problems, she said.

WOMEN BEATEN BY the men with whom they live—battered women—constitute a large percentage of the cases, Davis said.

"Women in a battering situation (beaten physically and abused verbally) are so beaten down and destroyed they can't decide the small things in life let alone the big ones," she said.

A woman coming from this situation is helped by the crisis center in several ways, Davis said.

—She is given safe housing for three days.
—A person from the crisis center accompanies her on visits for help, for instance a doctor or lawyer.

—She is offered the chance to talk about the situation and then look at it in terms of making a decision, which the center calls intervention counseling. Long-term counseling is also available.

COUNSELORS FROM the center will provide the woman with transportation if she chooses to leave the area, but remind her that she can't run away from the problem, Davis said.

The man who has beaten her will usually try to get the woman back if she leaves, according to Davis. He may try to persuade her to return with either threats or flowers, she said. KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN, Fri., April 17, 1981

Intramural rule changes put up for approval

Students to vote, call proposals fair or foul

Proposals to change intramural rules are up for approval by student balloting.

The intramural rule changes and modifications were discussed at a meeting Thursday in the Washburn Recreation Complex.

Any student may vote on the proposed changes, with a maximum of five votes per organization. Ballots are available in the rec complex and will be accepted until next Thursday.

Proposed changes in seven areas were listed on an information sheet distributed to approximately 50 students who attended the meeting. The list of changes were proposed and explained by Steve Martini, assistant director of Recreational Services and director of intramurals.

"There are reasons for each one of these changes," Martini said. "It's not as cut and dried as it looks on the sheet."

The proposed changes in the intramural softball program are:

Each team will pitch to its own batters.
 Two pitches will be allowed. If the batter hits neither, he will be declared out.

—A defensive pitcher will be located 10 feet from the offensive pitcher.

—The offensive pitcher calls batters out and safe.

—The catcher calls hits fair and foul.

Other proposed changes discussed include the retention of eligibility of a student to participate on a residence hall team for the remainder of a sports season if he leaves the hall during that season, a requirement of a minimum of four teams or individuals competing in a sport before T-shirts are awarded to the winners, and the requirement that a minimum of eight teams or individuals compete in a sport before points are awarded.

It was also suggested that kickball for women be eliminated, the 6-foot-and-under league for basketball be made competitive instead of recreational, the referee in the recreational leagues for basketball be eliminated and points for golf be eliminated.

Free services on the way out; banks switch to 'pay-as-you-go'

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Banks which traditionally offered free services in an effort to attract customers are switching to a "pay-as-you-go" policy that means higher prices for everything from safe deposit boxes to bad checks.

This week's ruling by the attorney general of Michigan, prohibiting state-chartered banks from imposing a fee for stopping payment on a check, highlights the variety of services provided by financial institutions and the variety of prices they charge.

"Banks are becoming more and more innovative" in finding ways to charge for previously free and sometimes unprofitable services, said Bob Walters of Sheshunoff & Co. Inc, an Austin, Texas, consulting firm which keeps track of banks' pricing policies.

Walters said that in recent years bank costs have risen sharply. The banks have been forced to pay higher interest rates. Customers are switching money from low-interest savings accounts into high-interest certificates of deposit.

The spread between the amount of interest the banks charge on money they lend and the amount they pay on deposits has shrunk. "The banks did the natural thing," said Walters. "They started charging for services."

The "free" checking account, without any minimum balance requirement, service charge or per-check fee, already has become an endangered species. Walters estimated that no more than 10 percent of the nation's banks offer free checking accounts today, compared to up to 50 percent less than five years ago.

A Sheshunoff survey of about 2,400 of the nation's 14,000 banks last November and December showed that all but 7 percent charge a fee for stopping payment on a check. The fees range from $1 to $10; most are in the range of $5.

The Michigan attorney general, Frank Kelley, said the stoppayment fees illegally "reallocate risk," shifting the burden from the bank to the customer. Walters said that if Kelley's action is upheld nationwide, "the banks would simply quit providing the service."

Banks already have raised prices for processing overdrafts and checks returned for insufficient funds, Walters said. Ninety-six percent of the banks responding to the Sheshunoff survey said they charged for overdrafts, with fees ranging up to $10.

Regular checking accounts and NOW accounts—interest-bearing checking accounts which were introduced nationwide in January—also carry a price tag, Walters said. Most banks charge according to the minimum balance and he said banks generally are requiring a minimum of $1,000 to $2,500 for a free NOW account.

Other "pay-as-you-go" services include safe deposit boxes. "Banks are definitely increasing their charges," Walters said, adding that "nationwide, those boxes are flat sold out." The annual rental for a small box, three inches wide and five inches deep, ranges from $3 to $20, Walters said.

Tentative allocations continue with debate

Collegian Reporter After a heated debate, Student Senate voted last night to fund the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) with a 20 percent increase in their full-time equivalency (FTE) allowance.

ASK originally requested a FTE increase from last year's 25 cents to 40 cents. Senate granted a five cent raise on the grounds that a 60 percent increase was inappropriate.

Bob Bingaman, ASK executive director, said the increase to 40 cents has been approved by the ASK board of directors and by one of the legislative assemblies. If finalized, the 40 cent dues will become mandatory in order for K-State students to remain as members.

"Our association has been in existence for nine years and we've never asked for a fee increase," Bingaman said. "K-State is one of our strongest members and I'd hate to lose it from a political point of view."

SOME SENATORS expressed the same fear.

"We're taking a chance on losing this group," said Paul Attwater, arts and sciences senator.

"Other universities will not reject this increase, in fact they are lobbying us to support it," said Angela Scanlan, student body president.

"The Legislature would take notice if the students showed their support by a healthy increase," said Steve Linenberger, ASK campus director.

Other senators disagreed.

"I truly think and feel that by our senate taking a strong stand against such a large increase at one time, it may make the other schools take notice of it," said Scott Long, arts and sciences senator.

DAVE CARLIN, arts and sciences senator, stated the finance committee's position.

Tout considers additional services, dentist, optician possible at Lafene

By DEBI DUNCAN chiropractor. Collegian Reporter

Students may be able to receive dental care at reduced rates next year at Lafene Student Health Center if any local dentists agree to work at Lafene.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene, said he has contacted the local dental society about the possibility of staffing a dental clinic at Lafene with local dentists one or two afternoons a 'week. The society's decision whether to provide dentists should be known within two or three months, he

If dental care becomes part of Lafene's service, evaluations, cleaning and some restoration work would be available, Tout said. No dental surgery would be performed.

STUDENTS USING the dental services would pay Lafene for the work done and Lafene would reimburse the dentists, he

The services would be less expensive at Lafene than at a private practice because Lafene would be furnishing the equipment. he said.

Tout said he doesn't "have any idea" of the chances of finding dentists to volunteer to work at Lafene. The dentists would be spending time away from "lucrative" private practices to "come in and help us out," he said.

"There's no guarantee that we'll get somebody here," Tout said.

Tout said he believed students would use the dental care service if it were available.

"We sent out a questionnaire to the students and they said they would use the service," he said.

A questionnaire was completed by about 300 randomly-selected students who have visited Lafene for medical care in November 1980, Tout said. The students were asked to list services they would like to see Lafene offer. Dental care was the item listed most often as the most wanted service, with 99 students selecting it. The list of possible services also included optometry, dermatology, a female gynecologist and a

HOWEVER, THERE are some students who refuse to go to Lafene no matter what services it offers, Tout said.

"For some reason or other, they think if they would go downtown, they would get better service," he said. However, "most doctors in downtown Manhattan have worked at Lafene at some time or other."

Tout had an informational meeting April 13 with Doug Dodds, Student Senate chairman; Angela Scanlan, student body president; Chet Peters, vice president for Student Affairs; and Dave Gantenbein, chairman of the Student Health Advisory Committee, to discuss the possibility of adding dental care to Lafene services. The meeting was to get feedback on the possibility of dental services at Lafene.

"I wanted everyone to be of the same opinion... They said to go ahead," Tout said.

TOUT SAID he will also approach the local society of opticians with a similar proposal as offered to dentists. However, the establishment of optical services at Lafene are "a ways off," he said.

"We're going to try to do one thing at a time," he said.

Lafene has funds available to purchase equipment needed for dental and optical services, Tout said. Funds are also available for the remodeling and additional plumbing work needed.

The estimated $25,000 needed to remodel and equip the offices would come from the Conrad J.K. Eriksen and Dortha Erisken Fund, Tout said.

Conrad, a former K-State professor, gave the University the money to purchase equipment and remodel the facility for new medical services, Tout said. However, the money cannot be used for salaries.

The proposed plans call for remodeling one of the 19 hospital rooms into an office for each of the dental or optic services, he said.

Remodeling the two rooms would not decrease the ability of Lafene to provide sufficient treatment for patients who must stay in the hospital overnight or ger, Tout

Giscard not injured in bomb blast

AJACCIO, Corsica (AP) - A powerful bomb exploded Thursday at Campo Dell'Oro airport here minutes after a plane carrying French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing landed, police said. Eight people were hurt but the president was not injured, they said.

Police said a single bomb containing about five pounds of explosive had been placed in an airport locker. They said the blast was so violent it first was thought two bombs had gone off simultaneously.

Jazz... ...on stage at K-State

By KENT SINGER

Asst. Opinions Editor

McCain Auditorium had jazz musicians oozing out of the woodwork Wednesday night during a concert which featured three K-State jazz groups and two high school groups.

Whether you like bebop, swing, jazz-rock, or downright funk, Wednesday's two-hour show was a delight for jazz connoisseurs.

Two fine high school groups started off the evening's jazz. The Lincoln Northeast Rockets ripped into "Flashback", a swing tune sparked by a cute piano solo. The Lincoln group finished with "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot", which featured almost all the players.

Particularly pleasing was the group's big, bold trombone section—something lacking in many high school jazz bands. It was also interesting to note that the band passed solos around liberally, giving everyone an improvisational chance to make it or break it.

THE MANHATTAN High School group followed, complete with a Maynard Ferguson-type introduction for their director Bill Harshbarger. Student teacher Harold Bosarge, a former drummer for K-State's Concert Jazz Ensemble, was featured as he whipped the band through "Love For Sale."

K-State's Jazz Lab II performed next, fusing their tuning-up procedures right into a fun swing piece. "Almost Like Being In Love" followed, featuring the vocals of director Richard Philbrook. Some impressive drum work overcame the band's tendency to drown out the vocals.

Jazz Lab I played next, and their sound included a strong trumpet section and crisper entrances than the previous groups. The band opened with "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home To", a swing number with good alto saxophone and trumpet solos and a full, well-blended saxophone section.

A basic blues tune followed, and many band members tried their hand at solos. The best was a low-down, gutsy trombone solo. "I'll Never Love This Way Again" spotlighted Philbrook singing, and the band's accompaniment was superb.

OVER THE YEARS, K-State's Concert Jazz Ensemble (CJE) has gained national and international acclaim as one of the finest college jazz ensembles. Under the direction of Al Cochran, this year's edition is as tough as ever.

The difference in the quality of bands was apparent immediately as CJE's overall product was crisper, brighter, and more powerful. CJE opened with "Every Little Beat Helps", a Count Basie chart which featured Joe Graber on tenor saxophone. Graber's fluid solo electrified a crowd that had become somewhat low-key over the course of the evening.

John Buette constantly pushed the band with sharp drum fills. The next number, a mellower Basie piece, featured a well-matched and blended sax section. The ensemble's dynamic contrasts were excellent throughout as sudden trumpet bursts occasionally laced the laid-back theme of "It's Oh, So Nice."

PERHAPS THE HIGHLIGHT of the evening was a four-piece combo which performed two pieces in the middle of CJE's set. The combo, consisting of Mike Gaches on trumpet, Gregg Briggs on tenor sax, John Buette on drums, and Tim George on electric bass, first played a 1950's bebop tune called "A Night in Tunisia."

The foursome's second number, a supersyncopated Brecker Brothers composition entitled "Some Skunk Funk", literally brought the crowd to its feet. The funk piece featured the bass-playing of George and the considerable solo skills of Gaches, Briggs, and Buette.

The entire ensemble regrouped to play the orchestrated "Time Stood Still" and "Blues For You", in which Graber's screaming sax was again the highlight.

CJE's professional performance was a fitting finale to an excellent evening of home-grown jazz.

Speech Unlimited shows talent at nationals

Forensics team gives 'quality performance'

By CAROL DOUGLAS Collegian Reporter

The K-State forensics squad, "Speech Unlimited," displayed their talents last weekend in the National Speech Contest held in Towson, Md.

K-State was one of 80 universities represented in the national competition with a squad of 11 students.

Lynn Ross, instructor of speech and the squad's public speaking coach; said the students who participated in the national contest were required to go through a "rigorous qualification system."

In order for students to qualify, they had to place in the top 10 percent in a district tournament, or place in the top 3 percent in three tournaments. Ross said the standards set for qualification contributed greatly in making the competition "very tough" and "intense."

Considering the level of competition at the national contest, Ross said she was "extremely pleased" with the squad's performance.

"There were a few disappointments, but as a whole we're very pleased with the team," she said.

Ross said the forensics squad has placed higher in the national competition in previous years, but that the tournament has grown larger and become more competitive than ever before.

She said she was excited about next year's squad because the Arts and Science Council has increased funding for the group and the entire squad will be back with the exception of two graduating seniors.

Harold Nichols, associate professor of speech and the squad's interpretation coach, said he believes the national competition was "better than it has been in the past," and said he considered it "extremely good."

Nichols said that although the squad is very young and "relatively inexperienced," he believes they are "very balanced" because they all did well in the national competition.

"Teams in the past years have done better, but this year more are involved and doing better at the national level. More students are getting the kind of experience they need to do well next year," he said.

The department has recently begun recruiting students, and Nichols said they are hoping to have a good group of transfer students next year in the squad.

Tom Overmyer, freshman in general, was the only K-State competitor to make it to the finals. Overmyer placed seventh in the after-dinner speaking category with a humorous speech with an underlying serious point.

Overmyer entitled his speech, "How to make yourself miserable," and said the serious message behind his speech was:

"People spend too much time feeling sorry for themselves instead of doing something constructive with their time."

He said K-State's squad compared well with the other universities represented in the tournament.

"It was the stiffest competition I've been against all year and I was honored just to go to the nationals. We were right up there with the rest of them," Overmyer said.

David Mueller, sophomore in agriculture economics, made it to the semi-finals in oratory speaking.

In oratory speaking, a problem is cited and a solution is given with the intent to persuade the audience to agree.

Water quality was the topic of Mueller's speech. He argued that "toxic waste, coupled with inadequate water treatment facilities are leading to the contamination of many drinking water sources."

(See SPEECH, p.10)

Speech

His persuasive solution to the problem was that people "need to get government and industry to work together on reprocessing toxic waste and updating water treatment facilities.

"The purpose of the competition was to have the best in the nation there and they did. I was very impressed," Mueller said.

As a result of individual tournaments throughout the year, he said he has seen "definite improvement" in his speaking skills, which he credits to the coaching staff.

"Their help, along with actual experience is what has given KSU the reputation they have in speech. They don't pressure you into anything. You work at your own pace with your own ideas, but they're always there to help. I think that's what leads to making it fun," Mueller said.

Craig Brown, junior in speech, made his way to the quarter-finals in poetry and afterdinner speaking.

Brown has been to the national competition for the past three years, and said he believes it is "the best competition across the board."

The past year of competition has been like a "dream." He has won 27 trophies for various speech events.

Debbie Neff, senior in journalism and mass communications, placed in the quarter-finals in both poetry and dramatic interpretation.

This year was Neff's fourth time for national competition. She spoke about a poet who committed suicide. Neff said she believes she becomes "flustered" during her performances and "psychs" herself out by trying hard to concentrate.

Although she has never made it to the semi-finals she said it has been "a lot of fun." She said she has learned "to place communication above competition."

'Night Shift' introduces horror to the contemporary audience

By JIM LAURENCIG

Collegian Book Reviewer Stephen King has established himself as the foremost author of horror stories in the 1970s. With critical and popular successes such as "Salem's Lot," "The Stand," "The Shining," and his recently released "Firestarter," his novels have consistently risen to the top of the bestseller lists.

But good writers do not just appear out of the sky. They must pay their dues along the

Collegian review

In "Night Shift," King gives the reader a glimpse into some of his early efforts. Most of these short stories were written from 1970-1975. During this time, King was a struggling school teacher making about $6,000 a year. Many of the stories in "Night Shift" first appeared in men's magazines such as "Penthouse" and "Gallery."

For King fans, these stories may appear a bit rough and uneven, but the reader must remember these are his initial efforts.

"Battleground," a story about a strange delivery from a toy company, makes the reader wonder about all those toy soldiers children play with.

In "Trucks" and "The Mangler," King uses commonplace items of technology as the sources of evil. "Trucks" portrays the behemoths of the highway as the final masters of the human race. "The Mangler" is about an interesting case of industrial demonic possession.

King also uses the traditional horror objects.

"Graveyard Shift" tells of the attempted extermination of a colony of rats, but the rats fight back. Two vampire stories. "Jerusalem's Lot," and "One for the Road," are obviously the seedlings from which the novel "Salem's Lot" originated.

One of King's greatest strengths is his ability to use common objects and situations to create terror. As displayed in "Children of the Corn," and "Sometimes They Come Back," children and adolescents are sometimes the instruments of evil.

The most disturbing story, because of its current relevance, is called "Quitters, Inc." It's about a organization that helps people quit smoking, lose weight and generally straighten out their lives. But the method is quite different from those employed by Weight Watchers or Smokenders groups.

For Stephen King fans this book is a must. For others, it is a good introduction to the contemporary master of horror.

Reagan decides to sell missiles to bolster Persian Gulf security administration, in another move to bolster Persian Gulf security, has decided to sell Saudi Arabia ground radar stations and 10,000 anti-tank missiles even while other major arms sales to the oil-rich kingdom are under fire in Congress.

"That's enough missiles to knock out every tank in the Russian arsenal, certainly all the tanks Israel has," a highly placed source said with some exaggeration. Actually, the Pentagon estimates the Soviets have about 45,000 tanks. Israel has about 3,000.

THE SECRET PLAN to arm the Saudis with the TOW missiles as well as a dozen highly sensitive ground radar stations for controlling interceptor planes is likely to spark further controversy when Congress is officially informed about the plans later this Opposition is growing to the prospective sale of five advanced AWACs radar planes and equipment to enhance the firepower range of the 60 F-15 jet fighters the Saudis are to get beginning next year.

Commenting wryly on the decision to sell 10,000 wire-guided missiles to the Saudis-all that were quietly requested-one source said "Maybe they want to use some for target practice." That source, like others, asked not to be identified-in part because congressional notification still is pending.

THE SAUDIS already have 4,000 anti-tank

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan missiles. When the Army asked why they needed so many more, according to a source who asked not to be quoted by name, the Saudis said one reason was "they wanted to shoot some up for training."

> Arms sales to the Saudis, which now total 35 billion, were on the rise before the Reagan administration took over. Even though the Saudis have boycotted U.S. efforts to secure peace for Israel among its Arab neighbors, the kingdom's vast oil resources and immense wealth facilitated U.S. weapons purchases.

> These sales are accelerating under the new administration, which is moving to bolster countries in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean region against any potential Soviet thrust toward the oilfields.

> The arms sales also are worrying Israel, which also is being bolstered by the administration as part of the same security

> THE SAUDIS fought alongside other Arab countries in the 1948, 1967 and 1973 wars with Israel and help finance the Palestine Liberation Organization, which is sworn to dismantle the Jewish state.

"We're feeding the crocodile, thinking they'll be nice to us later," a key congressional source said. "We're deluding ourselves."

He said the Pentagon, in promoting the arms sales, hopes the Saudis eventually will allow the United States to set up military

Federal panel to study U.S. crime

WASHINGTON (AP) - Only one in three crimes where force either is used or threatened gets reported to police in America, the world's most violent industrial democracy, a federal task force was told Thursday.

The eight-member panel, appointed by Attorney General William French Smith, is to recommend by mid-June how the federal government can use existing programs to better combat violent crime. By mid-August, the task force is to report on what funds and resources might be needed.

Harry Scarr, the most recent head of the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, reported on two different sets of figures the Justice Department keeps on crime: the FBI's uniform crime reports which total the crimes reported to police each year, and the Bureau of Justice Statistics' national crime survey which twice annually interviews 132,000 people to learn about the victims of crime.

The victim survey has turned up about 3 million violent crimes a year each year since 1975, Scarr said. During the same period, the FBI reports showed an annual figure of about 1 million violent crimes reported to the police.

'Black Hole' disappoints compared to 'Star Wars'

Editor's note: "The Black Hole" will be shown at 7 and 9:30 tonight and at 7 Saturday night in the Union Forum Hall.

By JIM MELIZA Collegian Reviewer

Somewhere in the vastness of space it is assumed there are stars, the gravity of which gravity became so great they collapsed. So great is the gravity that they supposedly suck everything into them. Planets, stars, even light can not escape the massive attraction of gravity.

These are black holes. Take a dash of this scientific speculation, add the Walt Disney production team, who then in turn dig up major plot lines from "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and out comes an overblown movie from the "Star Wars" school of escapism.

Needless to say, "The Black Hole" doesn't approach the craftsmanship of the George

Director Gary Nelson has assembled a cast whose credits are admirable. Unfortunately the performances that he elicits are rather uninspired. It isn't surprising when one actor gives this kind of performance, but when the whole cast barely surpasses the army of robots in acting terms, then something is wrong.

Actually, Maximillian Schell does quite well in the atmosphere of absurdity. His portrayal of Captain Nemo is acceptable.

All criticism aside, the film isn't as bad as the exploitive Battlestar Galactica. Its appeals are to the same type of audience, and the shoot-em-up format predominates. It will draw crowds. Even with those attributes, and the cutesy robots, the film still contains the image of other plagiarized Erpelding was the first adviser to receive the award sponsored by the University Activities Board (UAB).

The award was presented last night at the Ag Student Council meeting in Waters Hall.

"It was a great honor and I appreciate it very much because I like helping the students," Erpelding said. "I feel so strongly about this group because they are so strongly dedicated. I feel the award should go to them instead of me.'

Erpelding was presented the award because of the time and dedication he has put into the responsibility of being an adviser, said Elaine O'Neal, president of UAB and senior in marketing.

Erpelding was given a plaque with his name and "1981 UAB Outstanding Adviser of the Year" engraved on it. Next year UAB plans on raising money so the winner can be presented a $200 or $300 gift certificate,

The award was created because the members of UAB felt there was a need to recognize the advisers, she said, and the presentation will become an annual award.

"We felt it would be good to recognize who put out effort and time towards the group, who fulfilled their responsibilities and who was the above-and-beyond adviser," O'Neal

The award was also created to honor the advisers of campus groups and clubs because they receive no pay for their work.

The UAB mailed letters to each registered group on campus asking the president, or a member of the group, to write a letter giving specific examples of their adviser's activities. The group presidents were also asked to fill out a nomination form, explaining why they believed the advisers to their groups deserved the award.

"From all the responses we got we narrowed the letters down to three," O'Neal

Three UAB members read the entries and selected the three applications they believed were most deserving of the award, she said. The full board then voted to determine the

KPL files rate increase request with Corporation Commission

TOPEKA (AP) - A new rate increase of $26.3 million a year was requested Thursday by the Kansas Power and Light Co. in an application filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission.

In addition, the application asks that an interim rate increase in effect since last June be made permanent. That increase was designed to add $37.29 million a year to KPL revenues. William Wall, KPL president, said if the new request is granted in full, it would add about $8.23 per month to the bill a residential customer using 750 kilowatt hours.

The interim increase now in effect was calculated to increase the bill of such a residential customer about $5.79 per month.

Hal Hudson, of the KPL public affairs month would go up by a greater amount under the smaller of the two rate requests is because the company is proposing a redesign of its rates.

Tom Taylor, spokesman for the Corporation Commission, said any action on the KPL application would be months away. He said it probably would take the regulatory agency four or five months to conduct an investigation of the company's affairs. He predicted hearings would be scheduled for September or October.

Taylor said it probably would be November or December before there is a decision.

In a prepared statement, Wall said KPL does not expect a decsion before late fall.

"This increase is needed to recover expenses related to the operation of the second unit at Jeffrey Energy Center that weren't included in the interim request and to offset higher operating costs of the entire electric system due to inflation," Wall said.

He said the Corporation Commission had excluded several known items of expense at the Jeffery Energy Center in the iterim rate case, including operation and maintenance, wages of the people who operate unit No. 2, and the cost of keeping a fuel supply available.

"In addition, the iterim rates now in effect are based on the company's 1979 expenses,' Wall said. "Inflation in all the costs of running our business, including wages, materials and supplies and higher increst rates on money we must borrow, make a rate increase necessary."

The utility serves approximately 275,000 customers in 285 communities, mostly in eastern and central Kansas. Principal communities served include Atchison, department, said the reason the bill of a Abilene, Emporia, Hutchinson, Junction customer using 750 kilowatt hours per City, Leavenworth, Lawrence, Manhattan, Olathe, Parsons, Salina and Topeka.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN KANSAS NURSING HOMES?

"I took nine students in there and we had nine different patients. The patients were lying in urine or in feces; and there is no mattress pads on there, so it just run all up on these people, and it's in their hair and under their toenails and dried between their toes." (Official Transcript of the Hillhaven-Topeka Administrative Hearing, January, 1980)

"Collectively, as well as individually, these problems were not outside the range of reasonable normalcy for a skilled nursing care operation . . . The 1980 certification which is currently under consideration should be issued without delay or prejudice." (Hearing Officer's Report of the hearing, to Joseph F. Harkins, Secretary, Kansas Department of Health and Environment, January, 1980)

Homers pave way for Cardinals

NEW YORK (AP) - Keith Hernandez and George Hendrick ripped two-run homers and Darrell Porter hit a solo shot, giving the St. Louis Cardinals a 5-1 victory over the New York Mets Thursday.

Andy Rincon, making his first start of the season, was credited with the victory with relief help from Bruce Sutter.

Hernandez's fifth-inning home run followed a leadoff walk to Ken Oberkfell against loser Mike Scott and broke a 1-1 tie. Hendrick added a pair of insurance runs in the ninth with another two-run shot, scoring Hernandez, who had singled for his third hit of the game. The Mets jumped off in front in the first inning when second baseman Tom Herr misplayed Frank Taveras' ground ball for an error. Dave Kingman then drove him Taveras with a double to center. The Cardinals tied it when Porter hit his first home run of the season in the fourth inning. Sutter came on in the sixth inning after Doug Flynn doubled for his second hit of the contest. The Cardinal reliever then retired the next two batters, ending the inning.

Expos 7, Cubs 0

MONTREAL (AP) - Scott Sanderson scattered five hits over the first six innings and drove in four runs, three of them with a bases-loaded double, powering the Montreal Expos to a 7-0 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Thursday.

Sanderson knocked in the first run of the game by doubling against Chicago starter Lynn McGlothen, 0-1. The hit scored Chris Speier, who also had doubled.

Tim Raines then smashed a single to center scoring Sanderson. The Expos loaded the bases to chase McGlothen from the game, but reliever Lee Smith prevented further damage by getting Ellis Valentine to ground into a double play.

The Expos put the game away with a fourrun fifth inning, highlighted by Sanderson's double, a solid line drive to the left field corner against reliever Doug Capilla.

Phillies 5, Pirates 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt homered and sizzling Pete Rose had three hits to back the pitching of Dick Ruthven and Tug McGraw as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-3 Thursday night.

Ruthven, 2-0, scattered eight hits in eight innings, then Tug McGraw, appearing in his 700th major league game, set down the side in the ninth.

Ruthven overcame a shaky first inning when the Pirates scored twice. Omar Moreno was safe on second baseman Luis Aguayo's error, stole second and scored on Jason Thompson's two-out single. Singles by Mike Easler and Bill Madlock brought Thompson around.

Schmidt hit his second homer of the season off loser Don Robinson to open the second. In the third, Bob Boone singled and Rose, who has 13 hits in 26 at bats, doubled him home. Then Rose scored on Aguayo's single for a 3-2 Phillies lead.

They added a run in the fourth. Larry Bowa bunted for a hit following line singles by Gary Matthews and Garry Maddox, and Matthews scored when catcher Steve Nicosia threw Bowa's bunt past third.

The Pirates cut the lead to 4-3 in the seventh when Lee Lacey singled, Moreno walked and pinch-hitter Willie Stargell singled. But the Phils got it back in the eighth on Matthews's two-out triple and a wild pitch by reliever Eddie Solomon.

> AMERICAN LEAGUE Indians 1, Brewers 0

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Bo Diaz doubled home the only run and Wayne Garland pitched a six-hitter, leading the Cleveland Indians to a 1-0 victory over Milwaukee and spoiling the Brewers' home opener Thursday.

The Indians scored against Mike Caldwell, 1-1, in the second when Toby Harrah walked with one out and raced home on Diaz's double to right center.

Garland, 1-0, pitched out of trouble in the fifth after Ted Simmons singled with one out for the Brewers' second hit, and took second on a single by Gorman Thomas.

However, Don Money flied to deep center for the second out. First baseman Mike Hargrove then made a diving stab of Jim Gantner's hard grounder, which seemed headed for the right field corner, and threw to Garland covering the bag to retire the side.

Ben Oglivie doubled leading off the Brewer seventh, but the next three hitters were routine outs.

Tigers 2, Blue Jays 0

TORONTO (AP) - Milt Wilcox outdueled Dave Stieb for the second time in five days and Alan Trammell doubled home the only run Detroit needed as the Tigers defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 2-0 Thursday night.

Wilcox, who went 723 innings last Saturday against Toronto, when the Tigers beat Stieb 6-2, scattered three hits over 71-3 innings this time and struck out six Blue Jays, but was removed after issuing his

The only hits off Wilcox were singles by John Mayberry and Al Woods and a double by Alfredo Griffin. The Tigers raked Stieb for nine hits in seven innings.

The Tigers' first run came in the third inning when Rick Peters tripled to right center and Trammell followed with a double down the left field line. In the fourth, the Tigers loaded the bases with nobody out, but came away with only one run on Lou Whitaker's grounder.

KU, K-State pondering 2nd game

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Fans could be getting a double dose soon of the fanatic football rivalry between the University of Kansas and K-State, in which the two schools would play each other twice.

KU Athletic Director Bob Marcum and K-State Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds have discussed the possibility informally, although no dates have been set, The Kansas City Star reported today.

Marcum said he initiated the discussion because of potential open dates on the KU football schedule in 1982 and 1984. He said UCLA has asked to dissolve an agreement for games in those two seasons. "I think DeLoss was caught a little off guard when I brought it up," Marcum said. "But when I called him I was looking at the finances—Kansas State and Nebraska are our No. 1 money games at home. I'm sure we are Kansas State's No. 1 money game. If people refer to us as a business, then we have to have the same options of business."

"UCLA as well as Stanford (another team KU has scheduled for a home-and-away series) are concerned on the West Coast about traveling east. I'm not trying to be a prophet of doom and gloom, but today we better be concerned with the survival of certain sports (non-revenue sports that depend on football). We have been cutting wrestling and gymnastics programs in the Big Eight. What sport is next?" Marcum said.

Dodds said the talks were in a very early stage. Although the K-State schedule is full in 1982 and 1984, Dodds said there were a couple of games he wouldn't mind getting rid of. One is a 1982 meeting with Arizona State in Tempe, Ariz.; the other, a 1984 game against Vanderbilt in Nashville, Tenn.

A second game between the two rivals in a season would not count in the Big Eight Conference standings.

Nebraska denies 'Cat softball team of school record

It will take at least one more game before the K-State women's softball team sets a school record.

After tying the record of 16 wins set in 1976, the first year for varsity softball, Wednesday, the women set out for the undisputed mark Thursday against Nebrasak at CiCo Park.

But it wasn't to be. The Cornhuskers coasted to a 6-2 win in the first game and came back to take a 2-1 win in 10 innings in the second game.

The losses leave the Wildcats with a 16-15 record, while the Cornhuskers are now 18-10.

The second game was by far the most exciting of the two. Nebraska came up with a run in the third inning to take a 1-0 lead, and it stayed that way until K-State rallied for a run in the bottom of the fifth inning to tie the score.

Cindy Farris, who took the loss while pitching the entire game, tripled and eventually scored on Lisa McGinnis' single. But that was all the Wildcats could come up with, and it proved disasterous.

Nebraska won the game in the top of the 10th inning when Allison Bodley hit a solo home run to left field with two outs.

K-State had a perfect chance to win the game in the bottom of the seventh inning, loading the bases with two outs, but Cindy Wasinger lined a shot to center field that was caught.

Farris gave up six hits, struck out five and walked none in absorbing the loss.

In the first game, Nebraska scored a run in both the first and second innings and tacked on two more in the fourth to all but decide the issue. A run in both the fifth and sixth innings offset K-State's single tallies in the third and sixth innings.

The Wildcats will now travel to Topeka Saturday to face Washburn University in a doubleheader beginning at 2 p.m.

Basketball team to head to Japan for 6-game series

Jack Hartman has always been worried about K-State's height disadvantage during the course of a season, but a future road trip will have the Wildcat coach less concerned about it.

School officials announced Thursday that K-State's basketball team will play a series of six exhibition games in Japan this summer.

"We are tremendously excited about this rare opportunity," Hartman said.

The trip, June 30 through July 13, will include games in Tokyo, Yokohama, Shizuoka, Kyota, Osaka and Fukuoka.

The all-expense paid trip, sponsored by the Japan Amateur Basketball Association (JABBA), will pit the Wildcats against national teams from Japan as well as Czechoslovakia and China.

Fumi Kikuchi, JABBA representative, said K-State's success in recent seasons plus "world-wide respect of Hartman" were the main considerations in selecting the Wildcats as the United States representative.

The Wildcats finished among the top eight in the recent NCAA basketball playoffs.

This won't be the first time Hartman has been to Japan. He toured there in 1978 as part of an American Basketball Association-USA sponsored coaches' clinic.

"I found out during my first visit that Japan is an extremely impressive country," Hartman said. "It was the cleanest, and one of the prettiest places I've ever been. The people are unbelievably accommodating."

The trip will be K-State's first ever abroad.

"We've talked to two previous institutions who have been involved with the Japanese series, and they couldn't say enough good things about the trip...they spoke of it as a totally positive experience for the student-athletes," K-State athletic director DeLoss Dodds said.

Weekend sports

Women's Tennis

Equipped not only with tennis rackets but confidence as well, K-State's women netters will compete with Wichita State and Fort Hays at the Washburn Complex today starting at 10 a.m.

Although the team lost to Wichita State 9-0 and Fort Hays State 5-4 earlier this year, it has a more optimistic outlook provided by added hours of practice and tournament experience.

Tamie Peugh will compete in No. 1 singles, with Brenda Bennett playing No. 2. Candie Gwin will play No. 3 singles as Kathy Manning takes the No. 4 position. Kris Breisch is set to play No. 5 singles with Jean Stevenson possibly used to cover for her. No. 6 singles will be filled by Sherry Nelson.

As it looks ahead to action next fall, the team will be preparing for some major changes.

The 'Cats' top singles and doubles scene will take the sisterly approach as Susan Peugh, younger sister of No. 1 singles Tamie Peugh, has signed a letter of intent with K-State—providing her with a full tuition scholarship.

Peugh is currently a high school senior in Dodge City. In 1980, she was ranked No. 2 in the state after Hillary Evans of Plains. Peugh is also listed No. 12 in

"Susan is one of the top five players in the state as far as high school prospects," Hacker said.

The two sisters have been playing doubles for 10 years and are one of the top doubles teams in the region, according to Hacker

Besides Tamie Peugh, K-State's only other scholarship player, Kathy Manning, will not be returning for competition next year.

The second change will take place with Hacker's resignation from his teaching and coaching positions at K-State.

"I understand that Steve Snodgrass,

Plains. Peugh is also listed No. 12 in women's open competition in the state.

K-State men's

With the No. 3 singles player, Gary Hassenflu, back in the lineup after recovering from a lower back injury, the K-State men's tennis team stands a chance for victory against Nebraska and Missouri today and Saturday in the Oklahoma State Invitational at Stillwater, according to coach Steve Snodgrass.

Earlier this spring, Nebraska defeated the 'Cats 7-2, but presently one of the 'Huskers is out with a broken ankle.

"It's going to hurt their lineup," Snodgrass said about the injured player. "We're not anticipating getting beat 7-2 or 8-1. We're going down there with confidence."

The team will head for Oklahoma after solidly defeating Creighton 9-0 Tuesday.

The lineup for the tournament keeps Jeff Henderson at the No. 1 spot with Steve Webb playing No. 2 singles. Hassenflu resumes the No. 3 position; and Dan Forrester, Matt Westfall and Dave Krizman fill the No. 4 through 6 singles spots.

Playing No. 1 doubles will be Henderson and Hassenflu; Forrester and Krizman will pair up for No. 2 action, and Webb and Westfall will play No. 3 doubles.

Baseball

The turning point of the Big 8 baseball season is at hand this weekend for K-State.

"This is a key weekend," coach Dave Baker said. His Wildcats, 25-17 overall, are alone in the basement of the conference with a 4-8 mark.

K-State has played the first half of its league schedule. The second half begins with 1 p.m. doubleheaders Saturday and Sunday against Oklahoma State at Frank Myers Field. The Cowboys bring in a 4-4 conference mark and 32-11 overall record.

Although K-State is the current cellardweller, Baker said that could change in one weekend.

"The league is tough," he said. "If you don't play well on any weekend, you're going to get beat."

The same rotation that has started every Big 8 game for K-State this season—Mickey Fleeman, Mike Johnson, Louie Trujillo and Doug Able—will be out to stop an Oklahoma State arsenal which is hitting at a .329 clip.

All of the Cowboy starters, with the exception of catcher Mickey Tettleton, who is hitting .273, are batting over .300.

In 43 games, the Cowboys have hit 43 home runs and stolen 79 bases.

Iran a refocus on Vietnam

Hostages understand resentment

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. compared notes on their first 12 weeks of (AP) — Several of the former hostages in Iran say they understand why some Vietnam veterans resented the parades and yellow-ribbon welcome they received from a joyous nation.

But they say the Iranian crisis also-for the first time in a decade—made Americans think about the plight of veterans of that much-debated war.

"One of the side benefits of what we went through was to focus again on these Vietnam veterans and realize that it was a difficult time for them," said Richard Morefield, consul-general at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran when it was stormed in November

"Some of those POWs in Vietnam have spent more time in hospitals getting physicially-not mentally physically-rehabilitated than I spent in Iran."

Morefield, 30 other ex-hostages and their families are at The Greenbrier resort for a reunion and medical meeting designed to air any adjustment problems they have had since their release Jan. 20. They also few wives and mothers who spoke openly freedom.

In interviews Thursday, several reflected on the difference between the accolades that greeted them and the silence that greeted the young soldiers who returned-some of them on crutches and in wheelchairs-from the battlefields of Vietnam a decade ago.

"Vietnam wasn't popular. It wasn't popular to wear a green uniform on the street," said Army Sgt. Donald Hohman, a 38-year-old career serviceman and one of the 52 held captive in Iran for 444 days.

"I'd always been kind of patriotic, talking up America, Mom and apple pie through the '60s...Most people I'd grown up with were down on me.

"I guess they (the Vietnam veterans) were dumped on, but that's all in the past," he said. "I think a lot of the patriotism stemming from the embassy takeover in Iran erases Vietnam. And if this momentum continues, then I can say something good came out of these 444 days and I can bury some of the pain."

Morefield's wife, Dorthea, was among a and often during the captivity. She said the families tried to turn the nation's attention to the hostages, and away from the issue of whether the United States mishandled the

William Keough Jr., a school administrator taken hostage during what was supposed to be a brief visit to Tehran, says the Vietnam veterans were "victims of getting caught up in the issues."

Jerry Plotkin, a businessman who was held hostage, said even though he had never been in the armed forces, he felt he had done

"To be a part of that, I take a great deal of pride," he said. "It's really an honor to serve your country."

Blast traps Colorado miners; rescue efforts progress slowly

REDSTONE, Colo. (AP) - Rescuers wearing oxygen masks had to rebuild a tunnel's ventilation system as they moved with painful slowness Thursday toward 15 men trapped by an explosion 7,000 feet inside a coal mine high in the mountains of Western Colorado.

Asked to estimate the odds for a successful rescue, Robert Delaney, attorney for Mid-Continent Resources Co., replied, "I wouldn't place odds on them one way or the other. I'd say they are remote."

At 2:30 p.m. MST, almost 24 hours after the blast, the rescue team had advanced to within about 800 feet of where the men were last seen, but officials said the rescuers' progress would be extremely slow because of the need to test for explosive gases and rebuild the damaged ventilation system.

Officials said the cause of the explosion at 4:15 p.m. MST Wednesday had not been determined. But one of the seven miners who escaped after the blast said he thought it had been caused by a build up of methane, a highly explosive and toxic substance.

The rescue teams managed to move forward only 200 feet in three and a half hours of effort during the early afternoon.

Delaney said the rescuers were moving slowly because of federal rescue procedures which require crews to "build a path of clean air" as they approach an accident

The trapped miners were equipped with breathing units for use in emergencies, but Delaney said the units are good for only one

A crowd of miners and relatives kept a vigil at the mine entrance at the end of a winding mountain road.

The 15 men trapped by the explosion range in age from 20 to 40 and all but three are married.

"We tell the relatives to go home," said a mine security guard. "We tell them there's no use staying here. But when something like this happens, and it's someone in your family, you don't stop to think about things. You just get in your car and drive up here."

The explosion rocked the lower sections of the Dutch Creek No. 1 mine, which is located in the small one-street town of Redstone, about 30 miles west of Aspen.

Seven men emerged from the mine shaft after the blast, and three of them were admitted to Valley View Hospital in Glenwood Springs for treatment of burns, bruises and shock.

Israeli jets bomb, strafe Palestine, leave one dead

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Israeli jets wounded in the raid, and that the defenders bombed and strafed Palestinian strongholds in southern Lebanon Thursday, leaving one dead and two wounded, after two teen-age blue hot-air balloon and were shot down and Israeli frogmen also paddled into Lebanon's port of Sidon and blew up and sank a Lebanese cargo ship loaded with canned food from Cyprus, the Sidon governor's office said. No casualties were reported and Israel had no comment on the raid 25 miles south of Beirut.

Meanwhile, a nine-day-old cease-fire between Syrian and Christian forces survived fresh outbreaks of sniping along Beirut's Moslem-Christian dividing line. The main Christian commander called for talks with Syria to resolve the conflict he said left 600 dead in Beirut and Zahle, 30 miles to the east.

Communiques from the Israelis and Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization said the brunt of the Israeli air strike was taken by a guerrilla base in Ras el-Ain near the port of Tyre, which is 50 miles south of Beirut and 12 miles north of the Israeli border.

Israel said the planes returned safely from the attack that involved direct hits at Ras el-Ain and was aimed at preempting guerrilla raids on Israel from Lebanon, the PLO's main Middle East power base.

Guerrilla commanders on the scene said one civilian was killed and two were responded with shoulder-fired missiles from hideouts in adjacent citrus groves.

It could not be determined whether the guerrillas tried to infiltrate into Israel in a Palestine Liberation Front, a small group on the radical flank of the PLO which claimed responsibility for the balloon operation, had positions in the area.

PLF spokesmen in Beirut and the Syrian capital of Damascus said the balloon operation was designed to "escalate armed struggle against the Zionist enemy in Palestine" and claimed the airborne guerrillas landed south of an Israeli border kibbutz. But PLF communiques failed to say what happened afterwards.

The Tel Aviv command said the balloonists had come to seize hostages and demand the release of 15 jailed guerrillas, including two of their comrades who had tried to infiltrate on motorized hang gliders five weeks ago.

Tuition hike 'contrary to regents' policy'

Organizations contend increase is 'arbitrary'

Collegian Reporter The Board of Regents approved a 22 percent tuition increase Friday for the seven regents' institutions. The increase was 7 percent more than the original proposed increase of 15 percent. The 15 percent raise was approved by the Legislature.

The increase will be approximately $60 more than the present in-state tuition of $280 at K-State. Out-of-state tuition would also increase by the same percentage, from $820 to approximately $1,000. The tuition figures do not include fees.

The hike applies to all graduate and undergraduate students at regents' schools except those at the University of Kansas Medical Center.

The motion was passed by a vote of 8-1; the only dissenting vote was cast by Bernard Franklin, board chairman.

THE REGENTS' Student Advisory Committee (SAC), made up of the student body presidents of the regents' instutitions, issued a statement on its position regarding the increase.

"SAC strongly believes the

By JIM LAURENCIG action of the Budget and Finance Committee to recommend a 22 percent tuition increase is illtimed, arbitrary and contrary to Regents' policy," read the statement.

It was the contention of SAC and the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) that the increase contradicted policy because the board did not conduct a financial impact

"One of the disturbing things about the way the discussion went was that there was no mention of the effect on students," Bob Bingaman, director of ASK, said.

Steve Linenberger, campus director of ASK and junior in political science, concurred.

"In a nutshell, it seems that they didn't take the students' best interests into the decision making," he said.

ACCORDING TO Doug Dodds, K-State Student Senate chairman, the board did not make figures available to student representatives prior to consideration by the board.

"You can't argue against a position if you don't know what the position is," Dodds said.

Other student representatives at the regents' meeting questioned the way the increase was presented.

Members of SAC were not informed about the 7 percent addition to the increase until Friday morning. The motion for a tuition increase of 15 percent was to have been voted on, according to Angela Scanlan, student body president and SAC executive secretary.

"Some of the regents didn't even know about it," she said.

SCANLAN SAID this procedure did not allow SAC to fulfill its function.

"The purpose of the SAC is to provide counsel from the point of view of students," she said. The SAC members may not have had any effect on the decision, "but at least we would have been able to try to make a difference."

The 22 percent tuition increase is intended to raise the percentage of the cost of higher education paid by the students to between 20 and 25 percent. According to Scanlan, tuition currently pays for approximately 19 percent of educational costs at K-State.

An informal agreement between the Legislative Coordinating Committee and the Board of Regents in 1963 provided that tuition would be set at 25 percent of the cost providing educatin. The agreement was formalized in 1966, Scanlan said.

"Never system-wide have we ever been at 25 percent," said Mark Skinner, junior in political science and student lobby ist.

ONE QUESTION that arose was the ultimate use of the revenue created by the additional 7 percent increase, Scanlan said.

The increase was approved with the recommendation by the board that the Legislature put the additional money into higher education.

"I think they (the regents) feel pretty sure that it was going back to higher education," Skinner said. But he added until the Legislature rules on it, it could be used for anything.

K-State President Duane Acker has already made a determination of the use for some of the increased revenue at K-State.

"We have made a judgment to use at least one-third of the increase to fund university workstudy programs," he said.

This would be beneficial in three ways, Acker said.

It would increase the number of hands available to do needed University functions and would offset the proposed federal cutback in work-study funds, he said.

The third benefit would be an academic one. Acker cited studies which said that student employment increases the odds for academic success.

Reagan asks support for tax, budget cuts as he remains inside

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, stepping up his workload but remaining out of public view, lobbied by telephone for his economic program Monday and invited governors to the White House to make a personal sales pitch.

Three weeks after being wounded in an assassination attempt, the 70year-old president stayed in the family living quarters of the White House, continuing to recuperate, holding staff meetings and calling congressmen, said deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Beneath his window, thousands of children frolicked on the South Lawn at the annual Easter egg roll. Asked whether security considerations were involved in Reagan's decision not to appear, Speakes nodded his head in the affirmative. He did not elaborate.

THE PRESIDENT planned to confer today with seven governors to seek support for his tax and budget cuts. It will be his first meeting with an outside group since the March 30 shooting.

The group included Republicans David Treen of Louisiana, James Rhodes of Ohio, Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, William Clements of Texas, Robert Orr of Indiana and Pierre du Pont of Delaware, as well as Democrat Forrest James of Alabama.

The session is one ingredient in a campaign to build support for Reagan's program in advance of Congress' return to work next week and votes on parts of his plan.

About 200 editors and broadcasters from outside Washington were invited to White House briefings today on the economic package. On Wednesday, 180 county officials from around the country were due in to hear the same pitch.

WHITE HOUSE SPOKESMAN Sue Mathis said President Reagan was "not on the schedule" to take part in the briefings today. She said there was a possibility that the president would make a brief appearance at a reception afterwards, but that would not be known definitely until today.

The spokesman said Vice President George Bush, joined by other toplevel administration officials, was scheduled to conduct the briefings for the editors and broadcasters.

In another facet of the campaign, four teams of well-known Republicans, including former President Gerald Ford, plan to visit Democratic congressional districts in the South, holding news conferences and meetings to urge support for Reagan's package.

Reagan planned to make a telephone call Monday to Ford in Austin, Texas, to discuss the economic plan and thank him for joining in the lobbying campaign.

Cabinet members are under instructions from the White House to talk up the president's program in their appearances around the country.

Smaller target area required

Manhattan grant denied by HUD

By MICHELLE DUELL City Editor

An application for a $2 million Community Development Block Grant, which would have provided funds to rehabilitate Manhattan homes, make improvements at Douglass Center and help pay for Manhattan Day Care Center, has been turned down by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), Don Harmon, city manager, said Monday.

While citing reasons why the grant had been turned down, Gary Stith, Community Development director, said the city had not targeted a small enough area for Community Development improvements to suit HUD.

Stith said he was convinced the application would have been approved if the city had targeted, or had known to target a smaller area.

"Every year they change their criteria," Stith said.

SUZANNE LINDAMOOD, city commissioner-elect, said a recent memorandum from Harmon to city commissioners stated the city was aware in February the grant was not to be funded.

According to Lindamood, memorandum stated:

"The defense of HUD on the refusal to fund the program for this year was on the basis that we have placed too much emphasis on the southern arterial."

Harmon, in an interview, said "The southern arterial was only one element of Lindamood questioned why public disclosure of the grant denial was delayed.

Lindamood said, "At the time this was decided there had been no cutbacks in community development funding from HUD, so it cannot be blamed on any of President Reagan's cutbacks. I was shocked to find out in April about the cut."

In response to a question about the delay, Harmon said, "Well, we were in the process of appealing it hoping it would be reversed, but it wasn't. The city commission knew about it in February, because we advised them of it."

THE CITY APPEALED to the regional office in Kansas City and the HUD central office in Washington and met with the head of the small cities Community Development funding program, Lindamood said.

According to Harmon's memorandum, the appeals were not successful in getting 1981 funding reinstated.

"Next fall another application could be made," Lindamood said.

Wanda Fateley, another city commissioner, said she had heard in February that the grant wasn't going to get a favorable rating. The city will make another application in October, Fateley said.

"I was surprised and disappointed," Fateley said. "This is the second time we've been turned down...so it gave us an indication it was a little more competitive this

Harmon said the denial of the grant was not that important.

Man hits jackpot with last $10

LAS VEGAS — A man down to his last $10 invested it in a highstakes slot machine and won $355,000 at the Flamingo Hilton to set a record for a slot machine payoff, hotel officials said Monday.

Lawrence "Chuck" Balentine, 61, was leaving the hotel after two days of gambling and put his last $10 in the special highpayoff "Pot of Gold" slot machines, hotel spokesman Paul Burt said Monday.

After two pulls, at $3 per pull, five 7s lined up, lights flashed, bells rang and "a player next to me grabbed my arm and began congratulating me."

Brady's reaction to drugs not harmful

WASHINGTON — White House press secretary James Brady broke out in a rash and ran a high fever last weekend in an apparent reaction to drugs taken to ward off seizure during his recovery from a bullet wound in the brain.

By Monday, his temperature was back near normal and he "remains alert and in good spirits," a White House statement said.

Brady's temperature began rising Friday evening and peaked the next night, O'Leary said.

Contrary to what the White House reported last week, Brady, 40, had remained on two medications.

The developments in Brady's condition were belatedly disclosed Monday despite White House assurances by deputy press secretary Larry Speakes last week that reporters would be notified of any change in his condition.

Children 'happy' to return to schools

LOS ANGELES — The city's first school day in three years without mandatory busing went smoothly Monday as about a third of the 23,000 students who had been in the program returned to neighborhood schools to complete the last 10 weeks of the term.

At the same time, the state Supreme Court in San Francisco denied without comment an American Civil Liberties Union petition seeking a restraining order preventing the busing halt in the nation's second-largest school system, which has an enrollment of 529,000.

Busing foes urged the ACLU and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to drop efforts to reinstate busing and to support a bid to channel busing money into voluntary integration programs.

Court rules on rights of retarded

WASHINGTON — A 1975 federal law designed to prohibit so-called "warehousing" of mental patients does not give mentally retarded people the right to be treated in neighborhood settings rather than large institutions, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The justices, by a 6-3 vote, overturned lower court rulings that had used the law as a basis for finding that mental patients a "right to treatment" in settings "the least restrictive to personal liberty."

The justices said the lower courts were wrong in reading such a right into a disputed section of the federal Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act.

Monday's decision on treatment settings overturned rulings that would have required the transfer of most of the more than 1,000 patients at Pennsylvania's Pennhurst State School and Hospital in the Philadelphia suburb of Spring City.

'Demons or devils' chase man to death

LYONS — The son of a prominent businessman, screaming that he was being chased by "demons or devils," bled to death Sunday after crashing through a window in a house he had broken into, police

"He came in screaming, fearing for his life, I understand," Police Sgt. Bill Thompson said Monday of William Beierle, 20, who apparently died after a day of drinking and taking drugs.

Beierle, who bled to death from a laceration of an artery in his upper right arm, had been drinking with two companions Saturday afternoon, Thompson said. The officer said one of the companions said they drove to Hutchinson, about 30 miles away, Saturday night and acquired LSD, speed and marijuana.

When they returned to Lyons, Thompson said, they went to the home of Beierle, whose parents were out of town. The companion said Beierle went to bed but later crawled through a window and left.

Police said Beierle kicked in a door in the neighborhood Sunday morning, awakening a woman who fled from the house with her three children. The woman called police who started a search of the neighborhood.

Meanwhile, Thompson said, Beierle crashed through a doublepane window in a nearby house and cut himself again as he attempted to go through another window.

Faculty union might help

Representatives of various teachers' unions met with faculty senate representatives from the regents' institutions in Emporia Thursday to discuss the advantages of organized faculty groups.

Spokesmen for the American Federation of Teachers and the American Association of University Professors outlined the benefits of a united faculty in dealing with the state legislature over matters of tenure, grievance procedures, early retirement and academic freedom.

The organization and possible unionization of faculty members at K-State and the other regent schools would enhance their bargaining power and influence with the legislature. Most of the lobbying done for the University currently only represents the interests of the administration, according to Lee Quisenberry, higher education coordinator for the Kansas-National Education Association. With this system, the needs of faculty members often go unnoticed.

The faculty members of a university essentially determine its quality. K-State has lost professors in the past because of inadequate compensation, and students are the ones who ultimately suffer. If the formation of a teachers' union will assure better communication with the Legislature and improved conditions for faculty, the possibility should be considered by Faculty Senate. Such a union would benefit students and faculty alike.

Spread out tuition increases

Friday the Kansas Board of Regents recommended a 22 percent increase in tuition for K-State and other regents institutions.

This recommendation is up 7 percent from the amount mandated by the Kansas Legislature this session.

This recommendation is fair, but unfortunate.

A 22 percent increase appears to be a large amount, but when students consider how low a price they are paying for their education, it is a fair price.

However, the timing of the increase is unfortunate. With the Reagan administration determined to cut back grants and student loan programs, many students will already be facing tighter budgets in the fall. The 22 percent tuition increase will only add to the burden.

In the future, the Board of Regents should be more responsible in its recommendations. Instead of large increases in tuition every three or four years, it should be raised a small percentage each year so the economic impact is not such a strain on the individual budgets of students throughout the state.

The power of the Pulitzer

In a stunning news report last week, it was revealed that Janet Cooke, a reporter for the Washington Post, confessed to fabricating a story, for which she had been awarded a Pulitzer prize. The story concerned an 8-year-old child named "Little Jimmy," purported to be a heroin addict and a victim of child abuse.

According to the report, after publication of Cooke's article Mayor Marion Barry, Chief of Police Burtell Jefferson and others in the Washington, D.C. community were outraged about the child's plight and demanded to know where and who the child was. When Cooke refused to disclose her sources, the Post rightfully backed her up, citing their reporter's right to confidentiality. The Pulitzer was awarded to Cooke for journalistic excellence in feature-writing.

Only after her credentials were questioned and she was pressed for the truth by her editors, did Cooke finally reveal that the story was a misrepresentation. She had lied in print. Post editors were distressed, because it appears that they had their own reservations about the authenticity of the story, but had allowed it to run. They trusted their reporter.

One can only ponder why Cooke was compelled to commit such a devious act. To knowingly fabricate a story and then present it to the public, in the guise of truthful, investigative reporting, is tatamount to treason. The analogy can be considered harsh, but I believe it is an accurate assessment. A revelation of this magnitude can do nothing, but set the stomachs of men and women in journalism churning-at full speed. It is impossible to look upon an event such as this with anything but outrage, wonder and ap-

It is believed by some, that most journalists possess the morals of dards of petty thieves. Polls have shown that, in degree of public trust and belief, journalists take a back seat to used-car dealers. It is not difficult to find someone ready with an anecdote about the inaccuracy of the press. Journalists are often viewed as jackals, lurking about in the brush, waiting for the carrion of society's foibles to feed upon. More than once have I encountered those who dismiss the profession of journalism as one populated with people who care little for truth and more for sensationalism and deceptiveness.

It would be an exercise in naivete to give the impression that all journalists possess the wisdom of Solomon and the integrity of Moses. Many in news reporting will wheedle, cajole and resort to all manner of surreptitious behavior to dig a good story out. However it is not acceptable behavior to manufacture copy for public ingestion and then attempt to palm it off as a genuine article worthy of merit.

There are standards by which all journalists are supposed to abide. Ethics and social responsibility to truth and accuracy are drummed into the heads of most journalism students and professionals daily. It galls me to think there are those in the profession who desire to gain headway through fallacious

Could the pressure to produce have been so great? Did Cooke truly believe it better to turn in a story that was blatantly false, than to wait for a true story to unfold? What did she hope to gain through a lie? A promotion? A raise?

It is easy to dismiss what Cooke did as just another chapter in the never-ending tome on press irresponsiblity. But in doing this, it gives credence to action that is neither acceptable nor excusable. Cooke violated a trust afforded her by the public and her peers. At a time when press freedoms are being eroded through legislative alley cats and the ethical stan- fiat and by moralistic facists, we get a reporter from one of the most prestigious newspapers in the country spinning tales for a byline.

A fellow journalist and I had a brief conversation about the incident. He said that Cooke was not the only one who could be held responsible, that her editors must accept some of the blame because they did not go with their instincts and continue to question the story's

I say it was ultimately up to one person-Cooke. She knew when she sat down to type her first words that she was creating a lie. And in doing so she, in essence, balled up her fist and let it fly with a roundhouse punch, landing in the eye of all in her profession who are acquainted with the journalism code of ethics, and believe in praticing them.

The pledge of the Society of Professional Journalists states: "Journalists should actively censure and try to prevent violations of these standards, and they should try to encourage their observance by all newspeople. Adherence to this code of ethics is intended to preserve the bond of mutual trust and respect between American journalists and the American people." Cooke apologized to the public and to her profession. Yet, it is not possible to readily forgive her. The damage done to the credibility of a newspaper of such import can't be denied. Nor can the damage to the credibility of those in journalism be deemed untarnished. Readers will now look upon stories that appear in print with an even greater degree of skepticism.

Cooke committed a grave injustice to her fellow workers and to the public. Her sleazy deed demonstrates all that can go wrong in the desire to get ahead. I believe that she has smeared a profession that deserves and demands better than what she contributed to it. If it were in my power, Cooke wouldn't be allowed to subscribe to a newspaper-let alone write for one again. It is my hope that others believe the same way.

WRC supported

The logic behind Paul Stone's editorial of April 17 has some obvious flaws. Stating that Student Senate should not support the Women's Resource Center (WRC) is an irresponsible and ill-informed statement. There are numerous organizations that exist on this campus that are supported by student monies that do not even have the potential of reaching one percent of the student population. Using Stone's logic, no organization would ever get funded. If funding were based on the potential number of students to be reached and helped, WRC would be receiving larger sums of money than are needed to fulfill the service they provide. WRC sponsors programs that are open to all students and provides information and support for men's and women's groups, single parenting, counseling referrals, etc...

I would also like to address a statement concerning funding of the WRC made by Ellen Johnson, Johnson states that the WRC, and therefore anyone associated with it, has too much freedom. The Constitution provides humans with freedom of speech and the right to protest. To restrict those you disagree with is called "oppression." While no one is free when others are oppressed, it is obvious that those who oppress are not willing to give up that role.

Religion and education

Editor.

Kent Singer's editorial, "Religion apart from education," upholds his and others' tradition of "instant editorial."

This one makes several statements which seem to reflect little thought on the author's part. He states:

-that selling textbooks to religious schools is "religious exploitation." Are those of us who buy nonreligious textbooks any more or less exploited by those who sell them?

-that "the main users of these books are fundamentalist schools whose purpose is to promote religion before education." Perhaps if Singer would take the time to determine what fundamentalism is, he would discover that the issue in the minds of those of us thus labeled is not "religion before education," but "religion with education," something that has long been lacking in our schools.

—that "if children are to be allowed to form objective and independent opinions and theories, religion and education must be separated." Are children in our current educational system being allowed this freedom? I think not. Children are not, nor can they ever be, free to make "independent" opinions and theories. These are certainly going to be formed, to some extent, by the learning materials used and by those who teach our children.

Religion and education are never separate, in any real sense, because our view of the world affects how we interpret everything we learn. Singer deserves the right to educate his children however he pleases, and so does everyone else.

More about WRC

Editor,

I found Paul Stone's editorial on the necessity for a Women's Resource Center (WRC) the reflection of a narrow, shallow and misinformed mind. First, the editorial title: "The other half needs love, too." The issue is not love, it is funding. The Center for Student Development exists because of the needs of a diverse student body. All needs cannot be covered by one organization. We do not all need information about pregnancy counseling, rape prevention, singleparenting, and sex discrimination. Such services mean the WRC serves a larger proportion of the student body than any other student-sponsored organization.

Of the portion of WRC funding that comes from Senate allocations, Paul Stone's individual bill comes to just under six cents. I would personally be willing to round it up and send him a dime, but I'm not sure his opinions justify such an extravagance.

Editor,

Re: "APO protest Actions"

The article leaves out many important facts: 1) The Alpha Phi Omega (APO)-Women's Resource Center (WRC) incident was handled internally, a decision was made internally and appeals made by APO representative were denied; 2) the photographs weren't just "sexist," they advocated violence by depicting sadomasochism; 3) WRC was doing several things by the protest: a. expressing an opinion, b. trying to circumvent negative actions by men and women at the university who were enraged by the pictures, c. educating the campus to the idea that pictures of violence against women, besides being negative toward women, also tend to correlate positively with the "real world"; 4) APO members Johnson and Monica Haley agreed that the pictures were offensive and changed some of them; 5) the chairperson of the committee who heard the grievance, the student attorney and other individuals on campus who have handled grievance procedures, could find no rules or regulations that WRC had violated by their table and protest; 6) it is my understanding that the committee set up by the Center for Student Development (CSD) is a standing one to hear future grievances of this type, not an active committee to look into CSD organizations; 7) no organization- including this university-acts in a totally non-political manner; 8) every organization is guaranteed the right of protest by the first amendment; 9) WRC had been extremely cooperative with all of the procedures set up by the internal process; 10) "what is really going on" with the money WRC gets from CSD and SGA are programs, information and referral for women and men who seek counseling, women who seek special medical care, and all who seek many different kinds of services related to women's needs, and a library of materials for the 6,000 or so individuals who have used the center in the last year.

Union reaches agreement; workers to receive better pay

A final agreement for a wage settlement between Carpenter's Local 918 and Hunter and Lundberg Contractors Inc. has been

In a special meeting Saturday, union members voted 57-14 to accept the offer made by Hunter and Lundberg, general contractor for the general classroom and office building. The union workers will receive an hourly wage increase of $2.70, spread throughout three years.

The union workers will immediately receive an 85-cent increase, raising current wages to $9.83. Workers will be compensated for back wages at the new rate, beginning April 1. A 90-cent increase will become effective April 1, 1982 and a 95-cent increase, a year later, will complete the contract.

The settlement ends the process of contract negotiations which began April 1. The workers went on strike April 9, after a dispute concerning the negotiations. The strike stopped the construction of the general classroom and office building and the city library. Workers were back on the job April 13 and negotiations resumed the

The offer was "more or less what the local wanted," Charlie Cameron, the union's business representive, said.

"We did however compromise on one thing," he said. "The union wanted more

The union originally requested a $3.30 increase over three years but settled for the $2.70 increase offered by the contractors, Cameron said.

The contractors also had to compromise, in order to reach an agreement, said Bill Lundberg, of Hunter and Lundberg.

"We originally wanted a one-year contract because of cuts in the local, state and federal budgets," he said. "We wanted to wait and see how the economy would be."

The contractors also wanted the contract to include a Saturday make-up day, Lundberg said.

Lundberg said he believed it would have been advantageous for the union workers to have waited a year to begin negotiations because of the unstable economy. Firms that aren't under contract with unions can hire non-union workers for lower wages, reducing the number of job offers made to unions, he said.

Economy shows first quarter gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's economy grew at a robust 6.5 percent annual rate in the first quarter of 1981, the biggest jump in nearly three years, the government reported Monday. But the Reagan administration quickly contended the good news is no reason to dump the president's economic recovery plans.

At the White House, where officials have been talking of an economy in dire straits, Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, conceded that the new Commerce Department figures showed "a nice start" for the year.

But he argued that the brisk growth should not "overshadow the fact that inflation and unemployment show little sign of near-term improvement."

"The near-term outlook suggests that we will not be able to duplicate the first quarter's performance," Weidenbaum said in a prepared statement.

The first-quarter Commerce report showed a 6.5 percent annual growth rate for "real" gross national product—the value of all American goods and services after discounting for inflation.

The growth rate, helped along by strong consumer spending, showed the biggest quarterly gain since the 9 percent recorded in the second quarter of 1978.

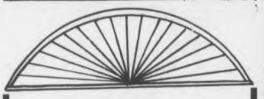

Real GNP had risen 3.8 percent in the final three months of last year as the national economy recovered from the spring recession. A 9.9 percent drop in the second quarter dragged down the overall 1980 growth figure to a negative 0.2 percent, the first yearly decline since 1975.

The first-quarter figures for this year seemed to show the recovery picking up speed, but Budget Director David Stockman said they were "hardly indicative of any

The GNP deflator, which fell to 7.8 percent from 10.7 percent in the fourth quarter of 1980, puts less weight on oil prices than do some other inflation measures, reflecting the fact that Americans are using less oil than they once did.

Security officers attempt to dissuade flower pickers

By JEAN DILLBECK Collegian Reporter

Although the punishment for picking a single flower on campus could be identical to that of chopping down a tree, Security and Traffic officers try to make the punishment fit the crime.

"Some young lady may take one rose, or one flower to put on her lapel, and not that much is missed," said Tom Shackelford, landscape architect for University Facilities. "It is the people with large bud vases who maliciously take 25 or 30 flowers—there we get into problems."

If a Security and Traffic officer catches someone taking a few flowers they usually let the person keep the flower and explain to them why the flowers aren't to be picked, said Jack McGuire, Security and Traffic patrol officer. Although they usually record the offender's name and some general information about them on a field investigation card, no other action is taken.

"People are not supposed to pick the flowers and we discourage them to do so," McGuire said.

HOWEVER, IF someone is caught digging several plants, the officer will request the person to put the plants in the ground and water them, he said.

Although criminal charges could be filed against anyone who is caught taking plants from campus, action that severe is normally reserved for more serious offenders, McGuire said.

"If a student cuts down a tree or a large bush, then charges can be filed by the county attorney," McGuire said. "That student could be arrested for theft or for criminal damage to property. It doesn't matter if it's a whole tree or one tulip."

One reason people are discouraged from taking flowers and plants is because the plants are for aesthetic enjoyment, Shackelford said.

"Roses in parking lots add to a visitor on campus and a little bit of color goes so far," he said. "Each one of those lots has something in flower during some point in the year."

Cuban felons wait for decision while imprisoned in Atlanta jail

ATLANTA (AP) — They came expecting freedom in America. But they weren't welcome and have been told they can't stay. Now, amid violence and legal skirmishing, nearly 1,800 confessed Cuban felons impatiently wait in their cells for officials to make the next move.

"Whenever the rumor gets around that we're shipping them home, they get very unsettled," said William Noonan, deputy warden of the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary, home to these unwanted Cubans.

The prisoners came to the United States a year ago after President Fidel Castro allowed criminals who wished to leave his Caribbean island join the "Freedom Flotilla."

About 19,000 inmates made the trip to Florida, and many were soon released because their crimes were viewed as political. But nearly 1,800 were disappointed—incarcerated, most of them, inside the Atlanta prison.

Cuba has refused to discuss the return of any of them.

"Who gets out and who stays in?" E.M. Treminsky, director of immigration processing at the prison, asked rhetorically.

"Some we never want to see on the streets," he said, "But then, there are others we feel should be out but who will probably never get sponsored. It is a continuing dilemma."

BUT AS THE near-certainty of deportation rulings become apparent, many of the inmates are recanting their confessions and seeking help from public defenders and civil rights groups.

One of these is Hector Zulueta Menocal, 24. "I was never a delinquent," he said, explaining that he had received a 14-year sentence in Cuba for stealing two pairs of pants and two shirts "that I truly needed for my family."

Zulueta has been sponsored by relatives but has not been allowed to leave.

Another man served 10 years in a Cuban prison for a 1950 murder. He was freed for 20 years, but has spent the past 10 months in the Atlanta prison.

"We have approved this man for sponsorship because we feel he has paid his price to society," said Robert McCarthy of the U.S. Catholic Conference, the only sponsoring agency at the prison. "But the authorities will not let him go."

DECIDING BETWEEN the "good" and "bad" Cubans is a major problem for U.S. officials, who must decide whether they should be permitted to go out into American society while awaiting deportation. Virtually all those confessing to crimes of "moral turpitude" are routinely receiving deportation orders, but enforcing the orders could take years.

"We have no paper at all from Cuba on these people, only their confessions," said Treminsky, the prison's top immigration officer. "The seriousness of a crime is much like beauty, it's in the eye of the beholder."

To the Cubans in the Atlanta "slammer," their world is one of iron bars, clanging steel doors and crowded cells. The 80-year-old prison was scheduled to close soon because it is outdated. The installation has now been almost entirely devoted to the Cubans and will remain open indefinitely.

The prisoners in "A" block are living eight to a cell—twice the number intended when the jail was built. The Atlanta Legal Aid Society has filed complaints, including inadequate medical conditions and ill treatment by guards.

Asked to comment on the charges, deputy warden Noonan responded, "You've seen the cells, you tell me if they are crowded." He insisted that his guards "don't use rifle butts like they do in Cuban prisons" to enforce discipline, but that "we are not soft and expect them to obey the rules."

Prison officials said their biggest initial problem was vast cultural differences. "The Cubans... are mercurial in behavior, wanting to fight you one moment, then be your friend," Noonan said.

THE FIRST GROUP of Cuban prisoners in Atlanta flushed the toilets for drinking water because they had never seen them before.

"And many fought over their first meals because they thought it might be their last," he said. Now the Cubans eat seven pounds of food each day, nearly two pounds more than an American prisoner.

The guards also had to adjust to the Cubans' habit of carrying knives. "They'll make a stabbing implement out of anything," said Noonan.

"We count all the bones after a spareribs dinner just in case they sharpen one of them," he said.

"All prisons have such incidents...they'll take justice into their own hands," Noonan said.

The Cubans are encouraged to learn English and practice simple crafts such as brushmaking and broommaking. The pay is from 38 to 57 cents an hour.

Only about 100 of the prisoners have visitors, but all seek out the Legal Aid lawyers and the Catholic Conference resettlement officials because they represent freedom.

"We believe that as many as 40 percent of the prisoners at Atlanta can be safely sponsored into American communities," Wynne said.

Immigration authorities have approved the release of more than 100 inmates, but sponsors cannot be found for them. The Catholic Conference has sponsors for 40 inmates who are not allowed out.

Community to vote on first city-owned bank

MINOT, N.D. (AP) - Voters in this prairie community of 33,000 will decide today whether they want to be the proprietors of the only city-owned bank in the United States.

Backers of the City Bank of Minot-brainchild of a political science professor a campus minister and a labor leader—say profits would mean better services for Minot without higher taxes.

But local bankers and businessmen say the bank is pure prairie socialism-an audacious, naive, costly, impossible plan.

The proposal may not be so outlandish for North Dakotans, who have a state-owned bank in Bismarck. Fritz Elmendorf, a spokesman for the American Bankers Association in Washington, said the only other similar bank in the nation is Farmers Bank in Wilmington, Del., in which the state has a majority interest.

The Bank of North Dakota, founded more than 70 years ago, is now worth $700 million, and last year it earned the state a tidy $9.7 million profit.

The Rev. Philip Heide; John Gefroh, president of the Minot Central Labor Union, and Carl Kalvelege, a Minot State College professor who conceived the city bank idea last May, waged a petition drive to put the issue on the ballot.

"It would be a bank like any other-except we wouldn't hand out blankets," said Kalvelage, referring to the items many banks give to encourage investors. He said

Clashes continue in Irish cities

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) -Three legislators from the Irish Republic visited weakening hunger striker Bobby Sands on Monday over protests from angry Protestants, then demanded an urgent meeting with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher "before it is too late."

In Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city, young Roman Catholics bombarded troops and police with stones and bottles Monday in a sixth day of violence that has escalated as Sands' condition declined. Police said five cars were hijacked and a bus set on fire in different parts of the city.

Catholic leaders in Londonderry appealed for calm Monday night as sporadic outbursts of stone and gasoline-bomb throwing continued, and police braced for more

In Belfast, police reported stone-throwing youths earlier in the day were on the streets in three Catholic districts and several vehicles were burned. Police said three homemade bombs and a revolver were seized in the Protestant Shankill district.

John O'Connell, a physician who said he tried to persuade Sands to end his 51-day hunger strike, said the 27-year-old Irish Republican Army guerrilla appeared to be within five or six days of death.

the bank would not be socialistic, but would function somewhat like a cooperative.

Minot bankers and businessmen don't

"First of all there aren't going to be any profits," said James Maragos, president of the Minot Chamber of Commerce, because Minot lacks the economic base to support such a bank. He notes the city now has three banks, four savings and loans, and eight credit unions. Arnold Braaten, president of First Bank Minot, warns if the bank fails to turn a profit, the city will pay with higher property

"Government should not run private business...That's not the free enterprise system," he said.

The business community has organized the "Task Force for Free Enterprise" to oppose a city bank. It is spending at least $4,300 in radio, television and newspaper ads in its campaign.

Kalvelage estimated $500 has been spent promoting the proposal, primarily on posters and newspaper ads, and admits he doesn't know just how the bank will be financed.

Because the Bank of North Dakota finances commercial banks, Kalvelage believes a $2 million loan from the state bank could get the city bank started.

But state bank President H.L. Thorndal is sour on that idea. "Kalvelage isn't running this bank—I am," Thorndal said. "I can tell him right now, that's not a feasible loan."

He added: "This is a college professor's idea that is not practical, and not needed."

Falkland Islands try to retain British rule

- Antarctic gales are so fierce here that no trees grow. Wrecks of 116 sailing ships litter the harbors and inlets. Even in summer, men chop peat in the bogs and burn it to warm their homes.

Still, the 1,813 settlers, spread over 200 islands with 659,000 sheep, lead a comfortable, if hard-earned, coexistence with the elements. Now, as winter nears, the harsh South Atlantic climate seems the most manageable of outside forces.

More threatening to islanders, who are British and want to remain so, are the political winds blowing from Argentina 300 miles away. The military government there is pressing an historic claim to the Falklands to extend its search for offshore oil and strengthen other claims in Antar-

EQUALLY UNSETTLING is Britain's willingness to give up the Falklands, one of its last colonies. While pledging to respect the wishes of the islanders, British officials have urged them to come to terms with Argentina.

"It makes me mad that in this day and age, after Afghanistan, that a democracy like ours can be pushed into domination by a foreign dictatorship where people are tortured and disappear off the face of the earth," said islander Velma Malcolm. "We want nothing to do with Argentina."

This view of the militant majority has been under attack since February when two members of the islands' legislative council took part in British-Argentine talks for the first time.

Council member Adrian Monk said Argentina offered, in exchange for sovereignty, to respect the Falklands' democratic institutions and British customs while pouring in enough aid to make the islands "the most pampered region of Argentina."

THERE WAS ALSO an implied threat that Argentina may cut off the islands' only air service and fuel, which it began providing a decade ago at subsidized prices.

To some, it's time for a bargain. The sheep-raising economy, which depends on London wool prices, is in a slump. The treasury has a deficit of more than $1 million, and taxes are higher than Britain's.

Talk centers on an idea suggested by

PORT STANLEY, Falkland Islands (AP) Britain under which Argentina would be given sovereignty but Britain would lease the islands for 99 years, an arrangement similar to that for Hong Kong.

> THE ISLANDS' COUNCIL rejected the idea in January and proposed a freeze in the dispute. Argentina rejected the freeze. The issue in this fall's council elections is whether to propose a lease-back plan to Argentina or pull out of the talks.

> Miller favors the lease plan, but his family, whose history parallels that of the islands, is divided. His wife advocates independence. Two sons are on his side, but a third, council member Tim Miller, balks at the idea of leased sovereignty.

Syd Miller's grandfather, a Danish sailor. was shipwrecked here in the 19th century. He married into the British community that arrived after 1832 when the Argentines, who say they inherited a Spanish claim, were

Tim Miller says he might have left the islands had it not been for a reform that enabled him to become the family's first

The reform—which Miller says he hopes can revive the island economy-was made under local government pressure. Until last year, the British-owned Falkland Island Co. held 46 percent of the land. The reform calls for the land to be sold or shared out.

Advocates of the lease-back plan want to attract fishing, oil exploration and tourism.

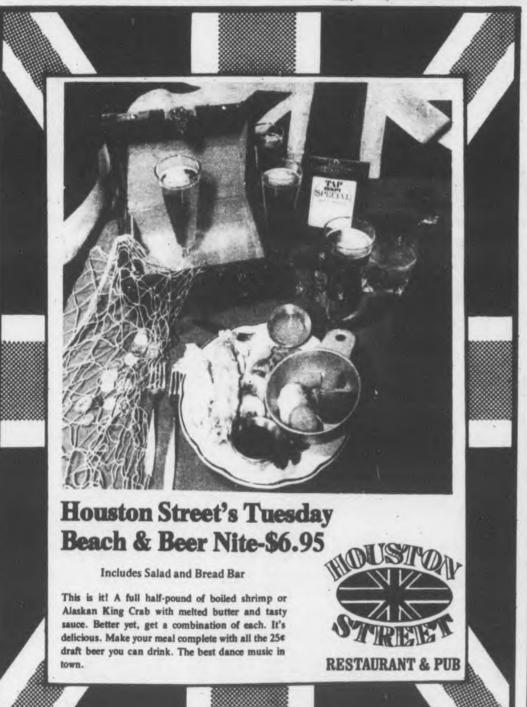

"If oil is discovered offshore it could be like a Kuwait here in 100 years," said Rex Hunt, the British-appointed governor. "The islanders could then negotiate another 99year lease with the Argentines or they could declare independence. It's impossible to predict all the options."

LAWRENCE — The KU Relays. Ah, yes, the KU Relays. Jim Ryun. Glenn Cunningham. Wes Santee. Al Oerter. The seemingly endless list of legends who have competed here throughout The Relays' 56 years of existence goes on years of existence goes on.

Building on Tradition—the theme for this year's edition of The Relays. With a title like that, it only seemed appropriate that Ryun, Cunningham and Santee—all of whom owned the world record for the mile run at one time during their illustrious careers at KU—were recognized Saturday before the final session began, a ceremony which ended with the three circling the quartermile track and undoubtedly rekindling fond memories of Relays past.

It only seemed fitting, too, that the 44-year-old Oerter, the four-time Olympic gold medal winner, the "kid" who hopes to compete in the 1984 Olympics at age 47, was on hand to give men half his age a lesson in the event named in his honor—the Al Oerter discus throw.

PERHAPS NOT A lesson, but a clinic. Overcoming a strong wind, the former KU star's positive mental attitude, not to mention near-perfect technique, produced a 204-9 throw and an easy win—by more than 16 feet to be exact—over some of the best collegiate and former collegiate throwers in the country.

Oh, yeah, and the rain. When you talk tradition at the KU Relays, you can't forget the rain. It showed up again Saturday, dousing the Jim Hershberger Track and spoiling most athletes' dreams of etching their names into the record books.

Before Mother Nature dialed KU's number, however, the Sun Gods shone on track people gathered in Memorial Stadium for the second stop of the Texas—Kansas—Drake Relays circuit. Six records were established Friday—three in both the men's and women's competition—as temperatures soared to 92 degrees.

The almost-perfect day also brought out the best in the K-State men, who, had team scores been kept, would have led the competition after Friday.

THE WILDCATS BROUGHT home one championship watch (Joe Bramlage, 249-10, in the javelin), two seconds (Ray Bradley, 58-7½, in the shot put and Veryl Switzer, 25-0½, in the long jump), two thirds (Doug Lytle, 17-0, in the pole vault and the four-mile relay team of Jeff Schleicher, Mark Sageser, John Holliday and Rick McKean, 17:03.8), two fourths (Gregg Bartlett, 56-8, in the shot put and the sprint medley relay team of Darryl Bonds, Mike Bradley, Steve Wright and Sammy Rotich, 3:21.6) and one sixth (Rodney Brogden, 24-3¾, in the long jump).

It was definitely a day to remember for K-State track fans, one which overshadowed Saturday's performances. The men's best finish then was a third-place showing by the mile relay team of Bonds, Bradley, Wright and Rotich (3:12.66). The women's two-mile relay quartet of Wanda Trent, Janelle LeValley, Sherry Thomas and Deb Pihl also finished third in 8:52.4.

The men also left town Saturday with a couple of fourth-place finishes—Bradley in the discus (178-10) and the distance medley relay team of Kevin Karst, Bonds, Rotichand McKean (9:53.80).

It was perhaps K-State's best showing ever at The Relays. But at an event where tradition was the word, the 56th running belonged to Ryun, Cunningham, Santee, Oerter and all the other ghosts of KU Relays past.

Unpredictable Kings, Rockets set to battle for Western title their zany, cock-eyed semifinal triumphs, the Houston Rockets and Kansas City Kings begin their battle Tuesday night to become the first sub-.500 team to appear in the National Basketball Association championship series in 22 years.

Their best-of-seven Western Conference title series will tip off at 9:05 p.m. CST in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

Any speculation beyond the site and starting time is dangerous with these two clubs. Both finished the regular season with 40-42 records and figured to quickly disappear.

But the Rockets, with the inside domination of Moses Malone and unerring shooting of Calvin Murphy, confounded the experts. First they won two games in Los Angeles to shock the defending NBAchampion Lakers in the mini-series. Then Friday night, trailing 67-56 at San Antonio, KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Fresh off the Rockets regrouped to beat the Spurs 105-100 in the seventh and deciding game of their Western Conference semifinal clash.

> The Kings have been equally unpredictable. Phil Ford, their sterling, playmaking guard, has been out with an eye injury since Feb. 22. Otis Birdsong, one of the league's top-shooting guards, twisted an ankle in the first game in Phoenix after the Kings ousted Portland in their mini-series by winning two on the road, Houston-style.

> But Kansas City, with its starting backcourt in street clothes, went on to beat the Suns in seven games, capping their march with a 95-88 victory in the deciding match

Sunday in Phoenix.

Not since the 1966-67 St. Louis Hawks has a sub-.500 team advanced to a conference final. The winner will be the first sub-.500 outfit to appear in the NBA championship series since the 1958-59 Minneapolis Lakers.

Softball team sets school record

The K-State softball team, denied of a school record Thursday in a doubleheader loss to Nebraska, established the school mark for most wins in one year with a 6-3 win over Washburn Saturday in the first game of a doubleheader in Topeka.

The women, who began playing varsity softball in 1976, completed the sweep with a 20-0 trashing of the Ichabods in the second game to raise their record to 18-15. They won't get a chance to improve on it, though, as their doubleheader scheduled for today at CiCo Park against Emporia State has been postponed due to wet grounds...

While the softball team was busy whipping Washburn, the baseball team watched as rain forced cancellation of two doubleheaders against Oklahoma State in men's Big 8 action. The two teams tried to play Saturday, Sunday and

In the KSU Invitational Friday, the women's tennis team was defeated by Wichita State 8-1 in the first round before coming back to whip Fort Hays State 9-

In men's tennis Saturday, K-State was defeated by Nebraska 6-3 in the Oklahoma State Invitational. The men will try to rebound today when they host Baker at 2 p.m. at Washburn Courts...

At the Wichita Classic Friday and Saturday, the K-State men's golf team failed to place among the top finishers. Brad Johnson and Jon Carlson shot 238s to pace the Wildcats. The men lost again Monday, 306-314, to Fort Hays State in Hays. Brad Johnson's 75, one off the low round, topped the Wildcats, while Tracy Faulkner shot a 79 and Carlson and Scott Johnson 80s...

Error, passed ball doom Royals in 9th

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Cleveland's John Denny and Dan Spillner stopped Kansas City on six hits and the Indians scored twice in the ninth inning on an error and a passed ball to defeat the Kansas City Royals 4-2 Monday night.

Bo Diaz greeted Kansas City relief ace Dan Quisenberry with a single with one out in the ninth that sent Toby Harrah, who drew a walk from loser Paul Splittorff, to grounder, allowing Harrah to score and Diaz to go to third. Diaz then scored on catcher Jamie Quirk's passed ball. Denny, 1-1, carried a three-hit shutout into the seventh when errors by shortstop Tom Veryzer and catcher Diaz led to the first runs off Cleveland pitching in 2423 innings. After Amos Otis singled and was wiped out on a double play, Mulliniks singled and Veryzer made a bad throw to second on Cesar Geromimo's grounder. With runners at first and second, U.L. Washington grounded a hit off Veryzer's glove into short left field, scoring Mulliniks. Geronimo also headed for the plate and was safe when Diaz failed to handle the throw for an error.

The Indians scored off Splittorff, 0-1, in the third when Alan Bannister walked, stole second and came home on Mike Hargrove's single. Andre Thornton made it 2-0 in the fourth with a leadoff home run, his first since 1979. He missed all last season with a knee injury.

Spillner pitched the ninth and gained his first save.

Yankees 6, Tigers 2

NEW YORK (AP) - Reggie Jackson and Oscar Gamble slammed consecutive home runs with two outs in the first inning Monday night, powering the New York Yankees to a 6-2 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Red Sox 4, Rangers 2

BOSTON (AP) - Dwight Evans drove in two runs with a towering home run over the high left field screen Monday, and the Boston Red Sox beat the Texas Rangers 4-2 on Boston Marathon day at Fenway Park.

Brewers 5, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO (AP) - Ben Oglivie's 12thinning triple scored Cecil Cooper with the winning run as the Milwaukee Brewers snapped a four-game losing streak with a 5-4 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Monday.

NATIONAL LEAGUE Cardinals 6, Cubs 1

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Keith Hernandez drilled three doubles, driving in one run and scoring two others as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated Chicago 6-1 Monday for the Cubs' seventh straight loss.

Winner Bob Forsch, 1-1, pitched the first five innings and allowed only three hits. After stiffness forced Forsch from the game, Jim Kaat and Bruce Sutter finished up with hitless relief. Sutter, who was acquired from Chicago last winter, got his third save.

Expos 9, Phillies 8

MONTREAL (AP) — Pinch-hitter Jerry White drilled the first pitch from Philadelphia reliever Tug McGraw over the left field fence for a three-run home run in the eighth inning, lifting the Montreal Expos to a 9-8 win over the Philadelphia Phillies

Dodgers 5, Astros 2

Body is not that Collegian of missing child

ATLANTA (AP) - The naked body of an unidentified black person was found Monday on the banks of the Chattahoochee River, but authorities say it was not that of Darron Glass. The 10-year-old is the sole missing person sought by a special police task force probing the deaths and disappearances of 25 young blacks since July

And authorities meanwhile found a 15year-old black youth missing since April 6 alive and unharmed. James Ralph Johnson had not been reported missing until 11/2 hours after the body was found Monday. His grandfather had believed the youth was at his sister's house.

The Johnson boy's case had not been assigned to the task force. Fulton County Medical Examiner Robert Stivers said the body is not that of Glass-last seen Sept. 14.

And a 15-year-old black Atlanta youth last seen April 6 was found alive just hours after his grandf3ther reported him missing Monday, police said. James Ralph Johnson was located in southwest Atlanta and returned to his home by police officers, said Detective C.D. Porter.

Members of the task force were called to the scene when the body was found in the same general area of the Chattahoochee River where the bodies of two young blacks were fished from the water last month. Both those cases are being investigated by the task force.

Stivers said the sex of the body could not be determined, but he was inclined to believe it was a male.

He said the build of the body was more suggestive of an adult than a child.

Fulton County Police Chief Clinton Chafin said the body was discovered on a sand bed at the river bank. He estimated the victim had been dead for at least two weeks.

The 24th victim, 15-year-old Joseph Bell, was found Easter Sunday. His decomposed body was discovered floating facedown in the South River in DeKalb County.

Fulton County Police Capt. Robert Baltimore said the body found Monday also was "badly decomposed. It could be a big teenager or it could be an adult. We don't know yet."

Chafin, asked if he believed the discovery of the body was related to the missing and slain children cases, said: "You always worry. But at this point it would be pure

The discovery Monday marks the seventh time since last November that the body of a young black has been found in or near an area river. It is the fourth body found in the Chattahoochee during that period.

Carlin signs bill to fund highway study

TOPEKA (AP) - A bill appropriating $90,000 from the state general fund to study the feasibility of adding four interchanges on the Kansas Turnpike was signed into law Monday by Gov. John Carlin.

The study of the each interchange is contingent upon local governmental units putting up 20 percent of the cost.

Proposed for study are interchanges at Lecompton-Perry Road west of Lawrence; U.S. Highway 77 north of El Dorado; Andover, and Kansas 53 near Mulvane.

The studies would determine the estimated total cost; which project or projects can be financed by revenue bonds; bond interest rates; traffic volume; and an estimate of revenues.

If a project is found feasible and bonds issued, the study cost would be repaid to the state general fund.

U.S. Navy takes responsibility for collision with foreign ship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amid growing furor in Japan, the Navy announced Monday that it "accepts liability for the collision" between the U.S. missile-firing submarine George Washington and a Japanese merchant ship earlier this month.

The Navy said it expects "all appropriate claims will be satisfactorily negotiated."

The brief Navy statement concerned the sinking of the 2,350-ton Japanese freighter Nissho Maru April 9, about 110 miles off the southern tip of Japan. The captain and another crewman are missing and presumed dead. Thirteen other crewmen survived when the Shanghai-bound freighter sank within 15 minutes.

"This action was taken in order to preclude lengthy litigation and to permit the Navy to enter promptly into negotiations with all involved parties," the Navy said.

THE COLLISION involving the nuclearpowered submarine has stirred a new public furor in nuclear-sensitive Japan. Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito warned last week that there was a "danger that the relationship of trust between the United States and Japan would be affected" by it.

The Navy has said the George Washington, traveling at shallow depths in the East China Sea, surfaced after the collision but "sighted the vessel steaming away in no apparent distress."

The weather was described as foggy and rainy. A U.S. plane in the area was ordered to conduct a search, but sighted "no vessels or personnel in distress," the Navy said the day after the incident.

The Navy announcement followed a statement by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki that "I look forward to the results of the investigation being conveyed to the Japanese side" before he is due to meet next month with President Reagan in Washington.

THE PENTAGON announcement said Navy Secretary John Lehman "accepts liability for the collision between the USS George Washington and Nissho Maru."

it added that Japanese lawyers have estimated total damages for loss of the ship and the cargo of 1,200 tons of raw cotton, as well as claims on behalf of the lost crew members and survivors, would total about $4.2 million.

Since the Navy secretary is limited by law to paying out $1 million for any single claim, it said that any amount over that would have to be "certified to Congress for payment."

"Punitive damages and reparations are not recoverable under admiralty law," the Navy added.

The Navy statement stressed that its acceptance of liability "in no way is intended to predetermine" any personal blame or responsibility on the part of the George Washington's commanding officer, 41-year-old Cmdr. Robert Woehl or crew members of the missilefiring sub.

Sailors get caught, freed in Cuba

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — A Cuban patrol vessel seized four U.S. sailors when their recreation boats strayed into Cuban waters near the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo on Cuba's southern coast, but American diplomats gained their release Monday afternoon, officials reported.

State Department spokesman David Nall announced in Washington that the sailors were released at 3 p.m. in Havana and turned over to Wayne Smith, head of the U.S. Interests Section. Nall said they would be flown to the United States on Tuesday.

On official in the Interests Section said earlier the section was "making appropriate efforts to contact authorities in Havana" about the release of the sailors, who were seized Sunday afternoon.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the four had been held at Boqueron, at the eastern end of the communist island nation. The sailors had been fishing in two small boats borrowed from the base and their craft apparently strayed from the U.S. jurisdictional waters at Grantanamo.

Cuban authorities transferred the sailors from Boqueron to Havana.

Navy officials said U.S. personnel at Guantanamo had been warned against sailing into Cuban territorial waters. The officials said a Cuban patrol boat fired a warning shot before the two U.S. boats were seized, but no one was harmed.

An official of the Cuban Foreign Ministry had acknowledged the sailors were in custody, but declined comment beyond saying the U.S. had been notified through official channels.

In Washington, the Navy said the four were all enlisted men.

Reagan marks KLSEP for elimination

Consumers to lose 'effective' representation

Collegian Reporter

Kansas energy consumers may soon be without effective representation at the state level, according to Art Thompson, newsletter editor for the Kansas Legal Services Energy Project (KLSEP).

Thompson delivered a speech, "Kansas Energy Politics-What's Ahead?" last night in a Manhattan Area Energy Alliance meeting at the First Congregational Church.

KLSEP, a federally-funded advocacy organization for Kansas energy concerns, has been targeted for elimination under the

By JIM LAURENCIG Reagan administration's proposed budget cuts, Thompson said.

The Kansas Energy Office, the state version of the federal Department of Energy, is also expected to have its funds cut drastically by the state Legislature, he said.

"If it survives it will be very small, but I'd be surprised if it did survive," Thompson said.

Because of these cuts, a comprehensive state energy plan will probably not materialize, he said.

HOWEVER, Thompson pointed out some alternatives for consumers and consumer groups to alleviate energy problems.

One alternative is for consumers to use the rights granted them by the National Energy Conservation Policy Act of 1978. The Residential Consumer Services portion of the act stipulates that utility companies must provide certain voluntary services for customers. These services include energy audits and information about insulation techniques and alternative energy sources such as solar and wind power, Thompson said.

Another alternative is for consumers to try to start energy plans on the county level, Thompson said. Some plans have already been successfully implemented in the state.

Thompson encouraged consumers to become more involved in the Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC) hearings held throughout the state.

He especially recommended consumer participation in the KCC hearing June 9 on the distribution of the utilities' research and development fund. The money for this fund comes from a small percentage of every bill collected each month. Currently, 80 percent of the money received goes out of state, Thompson said. "We would like to see more of it stay in the state," he said. "It would make a nice little kitty we could use to evaluate a variety of different programs."

LOW-INCOME ELDERLY are likely to be most affected by the lack of a comprehensive state energy plan, Thompson said. He cited their greater susceptibility to health problems caused by extreme temperature changes. He also quoted the results of a 1979 study which showed that fixedincome elderly spent 22 percent of their income on energy con-

Japanese nuclear power plant mishap exposes workers to radioactive waste

TOKYO (AP) - Fifty-six men were exposed to contaminated waste in a nuclear power plant accident on the Sea of Japan and the plant's executives may be indicted on criminal charges, the government said Tuesday. Fish sales from the area plummeted as brokers across Japan refused to buy the local catch.

In its first official statement on the accident, the Japan Atomic Power Co. said eight plant workers were immediately put to work mopping up the spill with buckets and rags after it occurred March 8. The statement said a subcontractor then supplied additional moppers who worked for 15 more

The utility said the cleaners, totaling 56 men, were exposed to no more than 155 millrems of radioactivity, which puts the exposure level considerably under the government-set limit of 3,000 millirems throughout a threemonth period.

However, the Ministry of Trade and Industry, which regulates Japan's nuclear power industry, disputed the company statement. It said it was likely the moppers were exposed to dangerous doses of contamination because the waste water had a relatively high level of contamination.

Minister of Trade and Industry Rokusuke Tanaka told the Japan

Times the company may have violated the Electricity Utility Industry Law by not reporting the spill when it first occurred, and that its executives may be criminally charged.

THE JAPAN ATOMIC Power Co. said its "top officials" may resign to "take responsibility" for the accident, which a Nuclear Safety Bureau official called Japan's worst ever in terms of "radioactive release."

Meanwhile, Japan's major fish brokers were blacklisting the Tsuruga Bay area catch, outraging the Fukui Prefecture Fish Cooperative.

The fishermen pleaded for the brokers to end the embargo and threatened to bring damage suits against both the government and the Japan Atomic Power Co.

The spill was not reported immediately by the Japan Atomic Power Co., operators of the U.S.designed, 11-year-old plant at Tsuruga in central Japan. The accident began to unfold after federal inspectors discovered abnormally high radioactivity in soil and water near the 357,000kilowatt plant, shut down April 1 for what was originally described as a routine, three-month check and maintenance period.

The amount of waste water spilled has not been determined, but newspapers have been quoting various sources saying it ranged from as little as five tons to as much as 40 tons. Top government nuclear experts were sent to the plant, about 190 miles west of Tokyo.

IN THE UNITED States, a nuclear industry source who asked not to be identified by name or company affiliation, said the water apparently leaked from a metal tank where contaminated water was saved, possibly because a valve was improperly opened.

The source said the water might then have gone into a pipe that was used to transport non-radioactive water back into the sea. He said the accident did not involve the reactor.

The accident gives nuclear power opponents added ammunition in their campaign to stop nuclear power development in Japan, the only nation subjected to atomic attack. An estimated 250,000 people died in the U.S. bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki at the end of World War

Japan, heavily reliant on imported oil, now gets 12 percent, or 15 million kilowatts, of its electricity from from nuclear generators.

Committee acts on complaints about computer science teachers

A resolution condemning the practice of using undergraduates as principle instructors of courses within the Department of Computer Science, was approved Tuesday by the Faculty Senate Academic

The resolution, which will be presented to the full Faculty Senate for consideration, requested the University administration to take steps to alleviate the problem.

The committee members examined a letter from Myron Calhoun, associate professor of computer science, that presented statistics about the number of undergraduates teaching computer science classes. According to the letter, of the 52 courses within the department which require an instructor, two are currently being taught by seniors; 13 by juniors; and three by sophomores. Thirteen of the classes are being taught by instructors who have doctorates, 12 by instructors who hold masters of science, one by an instructor who has a master of art, and eight by instructors with undergraduate degrees.

"I would assume that we would tend to hire the same kind of instructors for this coming semester as we have hired in the past (i.e., anybody who agrees to work for peanuts and who claims to have the necessary background!)," states the letter to Jerome Frieman, head of the Faculty Senate Salaries and Fringe Benefits Committee and associate professor of psychology.

The resolution was drafted by the Arts and Sciences Caucus, a group of senators who represent the

"We're probably going to see a lot of old people dead before we do anything about it,"

Mari Peterson, an energy representative of the Land Institute in Salina, also spoke at the meeting. She discouraged starting a state energy plan, but encouraged participation on the county level.

However, success is not only measured by the fact that a plan exists, she said. Creating interest about energy conservation is also

"We deplore the circumstances which have led to the use of undergraduates to serve as instructors with sole responsibility in undergraduate courses," reads the statement.

It continues, stating the situation in the Department of Computer Science is "in violation of accepted academic standards."

"We urge the administration to take all reasonable steps to alleviate the pressures that have led to this breach of the norms of quality education," the resolution states.

The steps listed in the resolution are: College of Arts and Sciences. The computer restricting class sizes to limits consistent with quality education, offering classes less frequently, having instructors teach fewer sections, securing additional funds, reallocating existing funds, and establishing a waiting list for students wanting to enroll in basic computer courses.

The committee approved the resolution, adding that action should be taken before the end of next fall semester. The committee will then review the situation to see if sufficient action has been taken by Faculty Senate, said Lyman Baker, member of the academic affairs committee and instructor

Irish end violent demonstration; British stand firm-no concession

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioters threw acid bombs at police in Londonderry Tuesday, and the British government stood firm on its stand not to grant concessions to end the hunger strike by jailed Irish Republic Army (IRA) guerrilla Bobby Sands.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, on a state visit to Saudi Arabia, rejected a plea by three Irish legislators to meet with them and consider Sands' demand that imprisoned IRA members be given political-prisoner status.

Medical officials said Sands, who campaigned from his jail cell and was elected to the British Parliament in an April 9 by-election, was slipping fast and probably would die within Authorities said seven policemen were treated for burns suffered when they were hit by bottles filled with acid and thrown by rioters in Londonderry's Bogside district.

THE OFFICIALS also reported a youth underwent surgery for a head wound apparently caused by one of the rubber bullets fired by the anti-riot police and British soldiers.

It was the first time in several years that demonstrators used acid bombs against police in Northern Ireland. In addition to the acid, an estimated 100 youths hurled gasoline bombs and bricks and set two mail trucks afire in the seventh day of rioting in this strife-torn British province.

Violence tapered off at midnight as the mobs dispersed in response to the Irish Republican Army's call for Wednesday to be a day of mourning for two 18-year-old boys killed Sunday when they were struck by a British army Land-Rover during street fighting in Officials anticipated more violence Thursday as Sands, in the 52nd day of his hunger strike at the Maze prison near Belfast, approached death.

THE MAINLY ROMAN Catholic IRA is battling to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Thatcher told a news conference in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, "There can be no question of political status for someone serving a sentence for crime."

Merchant warns of meter maid raid

QUINCY, Mass. — Sandy Rounseville is a Quincy merchant who hates parking meters so much he took to the streets on horseback to denounce them.

In the past, Rounseville paid off tickets for any customers who spent $10 or more in his fabric and furniture store in Quincy center, and he and other merchants have complained loudly to city officials that parking restrictions were forcing customers to the out-of-town shopping mails.

On Monday, the Patriots' Day holiday in Massachusetts, he took a cue from Paul Revere. He donned an 18th century costume, mounted a horse and rode through the center of town with a wooden parking meter, warning: "The meter maids are coming! The meter maids are coming!"

Court rules on maiden name request

TOPEKA — When a woman wants her maiden name restored upon dissolution of marriage, there is no room for discretion by the courts, the Kansas Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday.

The ruling reversed a Montgomery County District Court decision refusing to restore Pamela May's maiden name when she was divorced from her husband.

The Court of Appeals said the district court erroneously concluded restoration of her maiden name was discretionary. The lower court held it would not be in the best interests of her minor child to have a name different than that of her mother.

"We hold that in any case where the marital relationship existing between parties is dissolved by divorce or annulment, the restoration of the wife's maiden or former name, upon her request, is mandatory," the Court of Appeals said.

It ordered the Montgomery County district Court to enter an order restoring May's maiden name of Scourten.

Authorities arrest mayoral candidate

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A man who recently announced his candidacy for mayor in 1983 was arrested Tuesday at city hall for carrying a 5-inch knife after he allegedly threatened to assault Mayor Jack Reardon.

Charles McWilliams, 28, was arrested on a misdemeanor charge of carrying a concealed weapon. He later was charged in Kansas City, Kan., Municipal Court and sent to the state hospital in Osawatomie.

Police Chief Allan Meyers said Reardon called him about 8:45 a.m. after he was informed that McWilliams allegedly told city clerk David Isabel that he was armed and going to assault the mayor.

Meyers said he sent officers to search for McWilliams, who was found on the first floor of city hall where the city commission was about to meet. Reardon wasn't in the commission room when McWilliams was arrested, he said.

KC drug probe leads to 9 arrests

OLATHE — More than $1 million worth of cocaine and Quaaludes were seized and nine people arrested Tuesday after a nine-month drug probe by Kansas City area authorities.

The arrests were made at three Johnson County residences and on a county road about 8 a.m., said Lt. Lewis Hoskins, a spokesman for the Johnson County City-County Investigative Squad.

Hoskins said charges against the seven men and two women in custody were expected to be filed Wednesday in Johnson County District Court. Charges should range from possession of marijuana to conspiracy to sell cocaine, he said.

Hoskins said about five kilos of cocaine and about 150,000 Quaaludes were seized by authorities. He estimated the street value of the drugs at more than $1 million.

Queen celebrates birthday

LONDON — Queen Elizabeth II celebrated her 55th birthday Tuesday with most of her family at Windsor Castle west of London.

With her were Queen Mother Elizabeth; her husband, Prince Philip; her youngest sons, Prince Andrew and Prince Edward, and her daughter, Princess Anne, with her son, Peter.

Lady Diana Spencer, who marries heir to the throne Prince Charles July 29, was expected to join them, but Charles, midway through a five-week world tour, had to send his greetings long distance.

Radio and television broadcasts introduced all news bulletins Monday with the national anthem, and 21-gun salutes were fired at the Tower of London and Hyde Park to mark the royal birthday.

Recommendation without reason

The recent 22 percent tuition increase recommended by the Board of Regents raises some doubt as to who this body is trying to assist.

The general objective of the board has always been to improve education in Kansas. The lack of discussion and general vague attitude taken by the regents while approving the higher tuition increase leaves some doubt as to who the board is trying to

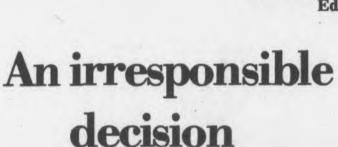

While some members of the regents were wondering what increase was being established, the Student Advisory Committee was left out of any discussion as to the effect of a higher increase.

It was impossible for the committee to offer input generally requested by the board for assessing what reaction could be expected from students with the larger hike. This oversight let the board pass a measure affecting students without obtaining any knowledge of how the increase will affect them.

Since student financial assistance will be tougher to get next year, the regents should have researched the increase from 15 percent to 22 percent. A determination of how this hike will affect enrollments, which have been projected to decline anyway, should have been made.

To be persuaded by one member of the regents to raise tuition even higher than anticipated without input from students who will feel the financial crunch the hardest is an irrational judgment by the board, and leaves a bad reflection on an already tarnished state system of higher education.

The Supreme Court Monday overturned a lower court ruling enabling the Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act to be interpreted to stipulate that mental patients have a right to treatment in an environment "least restrictive to personal liberty."

By attempting to minimize federal involvement in what should be a local problem maintained with local funds—that of treatment of the mentally retarded-the court has opened a veritable Pandora's box of potential abuses.

It is not simply a question of federal involvement. The 1975 act has been used around the country as the basis for many state laws restricting the authority of officials to "warehouse" mental patients.

By saying, as Justice Rehnquist, writing for the majority, that "We are persuaded that Section 6010...does no more than express a congressional preference for certain kinds of treatment," a meager checking system-that of Section 6010-has been taken from the realm of being an enforceable clause to being a legally useless philosophy.

Mental patients—and the mentally retarded—are seriously mistreated in this country. Any rulings that limit the few legal restrictions that have been imposed to protect their rights is a giant step backward.

For some, the burden of a mentally retarded person in the home is too much to deal with. But in the same vein, part of the responsibility of having children (or parents) entails a committment to care for their needs-whatever those needs are.

A ruling which, in effect, sanctions increased institutionalization of the mentally retarded by not recognizing that the institutionalized have been shown to make less progress than those in community settings or the home is nothing beyond irresponsible.

Religion via the boob tube

Televising church services for those who, for one reason or another, are unable to attend, began as a public service provided by conscientious networks and churches willing to put up with the inherent in inconveniences producing a television program. This service was presumably just an extension of the popular Sunday morning radio shows, those precious gems from Garner Ted Armstrong and his cronies. Somewhere along the line, though, this whole business of media mass has gotten out of hand.

IT WAS INEVITABLE that once the cameras rolled into the churches, there would be some changes in the order of worship. Ministers had to divine the fine art of camera presence. They had to learn to wear makeup, dress correctly, and, most important, speak distinctly and fervently. Soon more people became involved. Ushers, acolytes, and lay leaders were no longer familiar faces in the congregation. Even choirs were honed to a professional level. Congregations had to have that wholesome, perfect family look.

On the televised services today, every function is performed Falwell use their access to flawlessly. There is no longer any chance of a monotone tenor or a spilled collection plate. Any resemblance to a real church service is coincidental.

THE SUNDAY MORNING television services are now grand productions in vast cathedrals. They are produced with the polish of any CBS special and they have made instant celebrities of evangelists Jerry Falwell and Oral Roberts. Through this exposure, Falwell and Roberts have built empires which include their own schools. These schools need funds to stay alive and Roberts doesn't hesitate to ask for it on the tube.

Roberts' proposal is interesting. For a minimum contribution of $120, you can receive a limited edition Bible (not from K-Tel), complete with commentary by Oral Roberts and autographed by Oral Roberts. Kind of like Louis Lamour selling autographed copies of Hamlet.

Roberts is quick to point out that the money sent is not to pay for the Bible, but to help finish his "City of God," which is being built in Tulsa,

THE FACT THAT Roberts and television to advance their political views does not bother me. Church leaders have always tried to influence people to follow certain paths or to accept certain morals. Falwell's Moral Majority is just the most publicized and successful of religious lobby groups.

Popes past and present have often commented on societal problems and how to solve them. It would be strange if religious leaders did not try to persuade the rest of us to find the ultimate truth.

THERE MUST BE a church and a pastor somewhere who would not undergo a complete metamorphosis with the introduction of a television crew into their church on Sunday morning. They wouldn't ask you to buy anything, wouldn't demand that you purge the sin from your soul. They wouldn't rant, rave, holler, or intimidate. All you would have to do is sit and watch.

Until that church can be found, though, the current Sunday morning extravangas will have to be endured.

Efforts applauded

Editor.

Three cheers for the successful efforts of Ellen Johnson and Monica Haley in the grievance against the Women's Resource Center (WRC). It is imperative that actions performed by such a group should be at least monitored if not altogether stopped. Being a K-State student I am highly embarrassed that part of my activity fee goes to the support of such a group.

As mentioned in the article, this is an educational environment and, unfortunately, politics do get involved. That is no excuse. I applaud Johnson in her taking this matter to the Kansas Legislature and in questioning the legitimacy of the group mentioned. Such actions should have been taken long before this.

I find it extremely interesting that Cathy Stackpole believes the incident should be dropped because members of WRC are "not doing anything." Sitting back and waiting for the mud to settle will not correct the situation. Even more, I find that after WRC's strong protest last fall, they now seem to have no interest in APO or the allegations at all. Had no grievance been filed, those demeaning actions that took place against Alpha Phi Omega may arise with another organization. Other campus fraternities, sororities, clubs, etc., must follow formats in protests and the WRC is no exception.

Toward the end of the article, Stackpole states that it is sad that women are fighting against each other in this way. Why can't you realize that just because Haley and Johnson are females, it doesn't mean they should abandon the rest of society?

Lastly, WRC may have a lot going for it, and I do believe in its purpose. But unless proper channels of communication are followed, no worthy efforts will ever surface from it in this college community.

Theft a problem

Thursday afternoon while showering in Ahearn Complex locker room following my daily running workout, I became the victim of a situation I believe is of the utmost importance to the staff, faculty and students who use the facilities-theft.

I work hard for what little money I am able to earn while going to school, and when I purchase such an item as good running shoes, I would stake my life on the fact that those shoes are mine and mine only-not some other individuals who feels that the only way to obtain a pair of running shoes or any other personal property is to steal them.

I would like to say to those who are true gentlemen of the college community who believe that theft is a rising problem, that the fight against theft should be upheld. I hereby warn all of you that there is amongst us, a certain individual or group of individuals who take it upon themselves to permanently borrow the property of others from the men's locker room in the Ahearn Complex. It is truly sad that a person must feel that they have the right to steal from

Please make an effort to protect your belongings from such individuals so you do not join the ranks of the victimized locker room thefts.

Thanks senate

I applaud Student Senate's decision not to fund the newly-formed Coalition on Human Rights. While I support the free exercise of God-given rights throughout the world by all people, I object to the one-sided message presented by the Coalition and other groups during the Lou Douglas Series.

If the Coalition were truly sincere in supporting human rights, at least some of their speakers would have spoken out against the infinitely greater oppression committed by the various Communist dictatorships.

Far from informing us, the Coalition has only served as a transmission belt for leftist propaganda. I object to being required to subsidize, through mandatory student fees, causes which I oppose. If the Coalition or any other group is really necessary and worthwhile, it should have no trouble obtaining funds from voluntary contributions. Thank you again Student Senate, for saying no to the Coaltion on Human Rights.

Students rally today against higher tuition

"Invest in Education: It's Our Best Defense" will be the theme for the United States Student Association (USSA) Student Action Day Thursday at K-State and many other college campuses across the nation.

"We are hoping to generate students all over the country to get a feel of what is going on in Washington, D.C.," said Doug Tuthill, national chairman of USSA.

Students from all Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) member institutions will be participating in the National Student Action Day to express their opposition to the budget cuts to federal education programs proposed by the Reagan administration, according to Bob Bingaman, executive director of ASK.

"These proposed cuts to education programs will be disastrous to higher education access, particularly after the Kansas Board of Regents raised tuition at the state universities by 22 percent for next year," Bingaman said.

"According to some estimates, more than one million students nationwide will be denied a post-secondary education if the Reagan cuts are passed.'

K-State activities will begin with an open rally at 11:15 a.m. in the Union courtyard, according to Steve Linenberger, ASK and USSA campus director.

Bernard Franklin, chairman of the Board of Regents, will be at the University to speak on the regent-approved 22 percent tuition increase, Linenberger said.

"Also Bob Evans from financial aid will be speaking on the impact that the federal government has on us (K-State) with the tuition increases," Linenberger added.

"We are also trying to enact a 15-minute stop period where everyone on campus stops what they are doing and writes a letter to their congressmen in Washington, D.C."

The intent of Student Action Day is threefold, according to Bingaman: to educate the public about the cuts in federal financial aid programs, to rally grassroots opposition to the cuts and to demonstrate national student solidarity in opposition to the Reagan budget proposals.

"Students need to realize how important it is for them to speak up and get things accomplished to make everyone aware that we are concerned," Linenberger said.

Official proclaims young black 25th victim in Atlanta slayings declared the 25th victim Tuesday in Atlanta's series of slayings of young blacks.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said the case of Michael Cameron McIntosh, whose body was found Monday, was assigned to the special task force investigating the murders because of "similarities in his profile and that of some of the other cases.'

The task force also is investigating the case of 10-year-old Darron Glass, who has been missing since last September.

An autopsy Tuesday revealed that McIntosh, like 13 earlier victims, died of asphyxiation.

His body was found a short distance from where the bodies of two earlier victims were found three weeks ago.

POLICE SAID McIntosh was unemployed and apparently lived alone. Unlike the previous victims, he had not been reported missing, they said.

Dr. John Feegel, associate Fulton County medical examiner, had recommended earlier in the day that McIntosh be added to the task force list.

"We have a body in the river, partially ecomposed, black, albeit a little o the ones before, but not much older...no clothing, and again, without any overt cause of death," Feegel said. "I think this fits enough of the characteristics that it should be added to the task force list."

Feegel, who conducted an autopsy Tuesday morning, said a lack of marks on McIntosh's body prevented a positive ruling on the cause of death. But he told reporters

ATLANTA (AP) - A 23-year-old black it was "some type of probable asphyxial man who was asphyxiated and dumped nude death, and we are going to classify it as an into the Chattahoochee River was officially asphyxiation due to some type of suf-

> THIRTEEN OF THE earlier victims on the task force list also died of asphyxiation, and five of the 24 were found in rivers. McIntosh's body was found Monday in the Chattahoochee River, near where the bodies of two earlier victims—13-year-old Timothy Hill and 21-year-old Eddie "Bubba" Duncan-were found three weeks ago.

> Feegel said there were no signs of sexual mutilation on McIntosh's body, but because the body was nude it would be "reasonable" to assume the death was sexually motivated.

> The body probably had been in the river about two weeks, he said. McIntosh was not reported missing and was last seen alive about three weeks ago, said Fulton County Assistant Police Chief Louis Graham.

> Although McIntosh was older than any of the 24 victims assigned earlier to the task force, he was of slight build, standing 5 feet 5 and weighing only 120 pounds, Graham said.

> Two earlier cases involved adults, and in both those cases the victims were small in stature and described by police as mentally

Porter receives Nebraska Ag Award

Clare Porter, former faculty member and graduate of K-State, has been awarded the 1981 Ag Relations Award of the Nebraska Council on Public Relations for Agriculture.

Porter, who served with the agronomy department from 1942 to 1947, began his career in agriculture in 1937 as a county agent. He was named the secretary-manager of the Nebraska Crop Improvement Association in 1947.

In 1958, he became the general manager of a new company in Lincoln, Neb., NC Hybrid Production and Marketing Cooperative. When he retired in 1980, the company had grown to a multi-million dollar organization with 70 full-time employees.

Porter helped organize the University of Nebraska Foundation Seed Division and in 1969, he helped found the Nebraska Ag Builders. He also served as president of the International Crop Improvement Association and holds an honorary membership in the Association of Official Seed Certifying Agencies.

Interior architecture students place

K-State students in interior architecture won three of four awards in the regional Institute of Business Designers competition in Dallas, Texas.

They also qualified to compete for national honors in Chicago in June.

The contest was to design on old factory building for re-use for corporate offices and display galleries for bath and kitchen appliances. Sharon Georgacarakos, junior in interior architecture, placed second; Hal Swanson, junior in interior architecture, was first honorable mention; and Julie Brand, junior in interior architecture, won second honorable mention. Georgacarakos received $250; Swanson and Brand each received Certificates of Merit.

The entries were judged on the basis of relevancy to professionalism and on the comprehensiveness of their design.

The students developed their entries in a design studio for fifthyear students, taught by Eugene McGraw, professor in interior architecture.

Students from 11 midwestern colleges and universities paraticipated in the Dallas competition.

Two alumni gain honorary degrees

Congressman John Rhodes (R-Ariz.) and Glenn Beck, a former K-State vice president for agriculture, will receive honorary degrees at spring commencement this year. The degrees will be presented during the All-University ceremonies May 16.

Rhodes earned his bachelor's from K-State in 1939 before attending law school at Harvard University.

He has represented Arizona's first congressional district for 28 years and has held a variety of leadership posts in the Congress. He served as House Minority leader for seven years and chairman of the House Republican Committee for nine years. He was permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention in 1976 and 1980.

Beck earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Idaho and received his master's from K-State in 1938. He stayed at the University as a faculty member in the dairy husbandry department, earning his doctorate from Cornell University in 1950. He became head of the Dairy Husbandry Department at the University of Maryland in 1953.

After returning to K-State in 1956, hw was named director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station. In 1960, he was named Dean of Agriculture and was appointed vice president for agriculture in 1965. He retired from the position in 1977.

Shultis receives engineering award

J. Kenneth Shultis, professor of nuclear engineering, has been selected to receive the Glenn Murphy Award. This award recognizes contributions to undergraduate and graduate teaching of nuclear engineering.

The yearly award, presented by the American Society for Engineering Education, includes a $500 honorarium. It will be presented at the society's annual meeting in Los Angeles in June.

He joined the faculty in 1969 after spending a year as a scientific officer at the Mathematics Institute of the University of Groningen, The Netherlands. He is currently on a sabbatical leave at the University of Karlsruhe in West Germany.

Shultis has been the associate director of the C.C. Tate Neutron Activation Analysis Laboratory at K-State since 1972. He was also the Black and Veatch Distinguished Professor of Nuclear Engineering in 1978. In that position, sponsored by a consulting engineering firm in Kansas City, Shultis has taught and conducted research in nuclear power plant safety analysis and radiation protection.

He has written several books and publications about a variety of topics in nuclear engineering.

Conservative group organizes to express 'alternate viewpoint'

Staff Writer

"We need conservatism in the country, we need it badly," said Rep. Jim Jeffries (R-Kan.), in a speech Tuesday night. Jeffries, a member of the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) National Advisory Board, addressed approximately 30 people assembled for a K-State organizational meeting of YAF.

Speaking on President Reagan's economic plan and describing it as a "needed change," Jeffries said Reagan "could end up being the most unpopular man we've seen in a long time," because special interest groups are "miffed" about funding cutbacks. YAF is a group of "young conservatives who support a market economy as the best means of ensuring economic freedom, stability, and growth...and an educational system which ensures an opportunity for all to seek a quality education," according to a pamphlet published by YAF, Inc.

YAF, founded in 1960 at Sharon, Conn.-home of conservative William Buckley-is the "largest and leading conservative youth organization," in the United States, said Scott Wedekind, junior in computer science and history, and one of two students organizing YAF at K-State. The other organizer is Alan Moberly, junior in accounting.

BY FORMING a K-State chapter of YAF, Wedekind said he hopes to educate people in the "conservative ideology." YAF can express an alternate point of view, he said.

Wedekind intends to work toward this goal by providing projects to get students in-volved in politics, he said. He said he hopes to help introduce conservative speakers to the Landon Lecture series

The main purpose of YAF is to help persons under age 39 "...to provide a way for those who believe in limited government and a free market economy to develop their talents; to become influential," Wedekind said. Many U.S. congressmen were YAF members, he added.

ACCORDING TO "In Pursuit of Freedom," a movie produced by YAF, Inc. and shown at Tuesday's meeting, YAF is "aggressively forwarding the conservative cause."

Although Wedekind describes YAF members as conservative, the word "conservative" has bad connotations, he said. Many persons think of conservatives as "war hawks...who care not for individuals," but rather for property, money and wealth, he said.

"That's not the case," Wedekind said.

By ALICE SKY "But there are extremists in every group."

Wedekind said he is proud to be conservative and believes in a limited government. The government has "no place" in education, production of energy or protection of the environment, he said.

"I'm not saying that those are not good causes," he emphasized, but the "in-dependent sector," which consists of in-dividuals, not government, should solve them, he said.

"The independent sector is a sleeping giant," Wedekind said, "It is you and me...doing something."

FOR EXAMPLE, he said, the March of Dimes is "very effective" yet it is not a government program.

"Government officials can lend their names as individuals," he said, lending prestige to a program, but they should not do so in the name of the government. The solution to problems is not in affirmative action, but in education, Wedekind said.

Myron Calhoun, professor of computer science and advisor for the organization, agreed the major goal of the group is education. People must learn they can succeed without government intervention, Calhoun said.

Wedekind spoke of welfare as "forced benevolence." The government takes money from a person's paycheck to give to others, he said. Yet, if a car was taken from someone who had two cars and given to another who had no car, that would be called stealing, he said.

"The government gets away with it."

YAF ADVOCATES individual action, he said. There are "hundreds of thousands" of organizations that will help if they are allowed to.

"People are willing to work to improve their communities," but when those people know the government will step in, they opt to let the government take care of community problems, Wedekind said.

America was founded by people who "did what they had to-they lived or died, but it was up to them," Calhoun said. Now, when "a person's shoes begin to pinch a little, he yells to the government" to help.

Although only nine persons stayed to learn about YAF after Jeffries spoke, Wedekind said he is not discouraged.

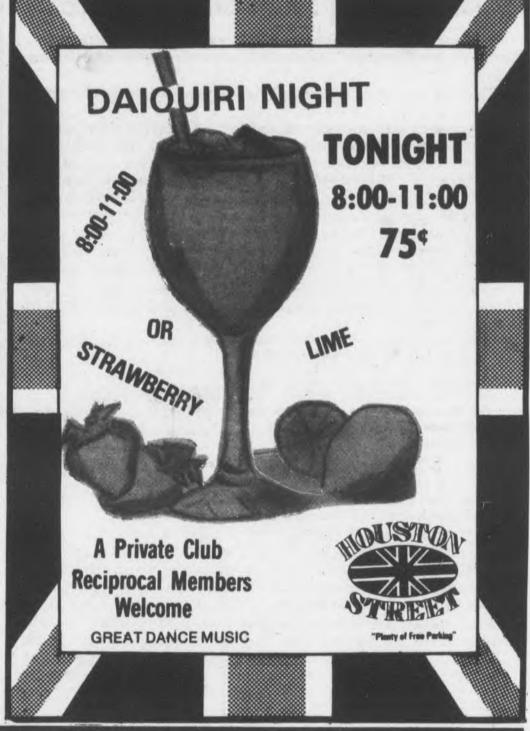

"We have done some groundwork," he said, adding that he will further this by approaching students one-on-one.

"People will get involved once they know we can do something," he said. "We're a Police strip searches go a little bit too far

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS A woman arrested for drunken driving in Arlington, Va., was taken to the county jail, stripped naked and searched. So was a woman arrested for playing her stereo too loudly. And a woman who ate a turkey sandwich on a subway.

In Fremont, Calif., it happened to a woman who went to the police station to explain she didn't need a new dog license because her dog had run away.

In Ocean City, N.J., it was a woman arrested for going barefoot on the Boardwalk, and in Wheat Ridge, Colo. it was a 14year-old girl accused of stealing $1.35 worth of candy bars.

DESPITE NEW LAWS and policies limiting strip searches, many police departments still force some people suspected of minor offenses to undress and submit to searches that may include inspections of anal and vaginal body cavities, say the American Civil Liberties Union and the Justice Department.

"The practice is rampant," said Harriet Kurlander, an official at ACLU headquarters in New York.

ACLU officials say they have no argument with the strip searching of people accused of serious crimes but maintain too many police departments strip search people accused of minor offenses.

"It seems to be strange that we require a warrant to search a home or office, but someone can put a finger into your body cavity without a warrant," James Joy, a Colorado ACLU official, said.

POLICE SAY the searches help keep drugs and weapons out of the jails and protect officers and inmates. "It's not meant to punish anybody," Arlington County Sheriff Jim Gondles said. "It's meant to protect everybody."

Court rulings have generally upheld authorities' right to conduct strip searches. But the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that people who are illegally strip searched can sue for cash damages.

Lois Lipton, a ACLU attorney in Chicago, said strip searches can violate several constitutionally protected rights, including the guarantee against unreasonable searches.

Sex discrimination was the basis of the nation's first major strip search case, in which Chicago police were named in an ACLU lawsuit alleging women were strip searched more often than men.

IN THE YEAR since Chicago police changed their rules and offered cash settlements to 191 women, suits have prompted new search procedures in Houston, Suffolk County, N.Y., Independence, Mo., Thornton, Colo., and Racine, Wis. And the Justice Department recently entered an agreement with Lee County, Fla., to limit strip sear-

Chicago offered each plaintiff $250 if she or might hurt themselves or others. He had been routinely strip searched and $1,000 if a body cavity search was done. More than 100 women are suing for more.

The ACLU said the largest strip search settlement thus far was the $25,000 which Suffolk County, N.Y., authorities last month agreed to pay legal secretary Diane Sala. She was subjected to a body cavity search after failing to respond to a summons she never received.

"I'm happy with the settlement, yet...I will never in my life be able to forget the search," Sala said. "It was horrible. It will stay with me forever."

BARBARA FOSTER, a criminal justice researcher for the Natignal Conference of State Legislatures, said Illinois, Michigan, Missouri and Connecticut have passed laws limiting strip searches, and several other states are considering such laws.

The laws generally allow strip searches in minor cases only if officers have a warrant, if the accused will be jailed or if there is reason to suspect concealed weapons or drugs. Vaginal or anal searches are usually allowed only by medical workers of the Commissioners take oath; discuss development, grant

By RHONDA SHIDELER private and public funds.

Collegian Reporter The Manhattan City Commission meeting last night included a public hearing on the city's application for an Urban Development Action Grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Develoment.

Newly elected commissioners Wanda Fateley, Dave Fiser, and Suzanne Lindamood were sworn in preceding the 31/2 hour session. Newly appointed Mayor Russell Reitz presided.

The UDAG would be used to help finance the downtown redevelopment program.

After much deliberation on the decision of whether to apply for the $8 million UDAG in May, the commissioners voted to delay the application until August.

Gary Stith, downtown redevelopment coordinator, said development plans would be better defined at that time, making the application more complete.

"It's better off to wait until the commitment from the developers are made firmer," Stith said.

Although the UDAG application has been delayed for various reasons, including changes by the Reagan administration, Reitz said, "I'm not admitting a single inch of defeat on the project."

The consideration to apply for the grant will be reviewed again in July, Stith said.

After discussing the application, Lindamood moved that the grant application still be made in May, but the motion died without a second.

Stith presented financing figures for the downtown redevelopment project, including the proposed mall and part of the southern arterial.

Stith gave a financial breakdown of each individual aspect of the redevelopment for downtown Manhattan, which included

The total redevelopment project would be funded with $46,824,000 in private money and $11,560,000 in public contributions, Stith said. Most of the private money would be involved with construction of the proposed Possible sources of public funds include the UDAG, industrial revenue bonds, and tax increment financing, he said.

A presentation covering the history of downtown redevelopment, including the present condition of the structures, architectural detail, and the importance of maintaining the character of downtown, was given by Stith.

Stith emphasized some problems with the existing condition of the buildings including disrepair, dilapidation and lack of variety in the design of the structures.

In other business, the commission discussed the development of a parking lot adjacent to the Girl Scout Little House on Sunset Avenue, which would facilitate sororities and fraternities in the area.

According to Reitz, the area was originally zoned for cemetery use. However, underlying rock prohibited the use of the land for cemetery purposes, he said.

City Manager Don Harmon said the city's engineering department would draw a sketch showing accommodations for 40 parking spaces in the existing lot. According to Harmon, the drawing would be presented at a public hearing, and further decisions on whether to approve or alter the plans would be made at that time.

The parking lot could involve some problems from persons in the neighborhood protesting its construction, William Frost, city attorney, said.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN KANSAS NURSING HOMES?

Woman offers $35,000 for 'Big Mac' sticker

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - The ante is going up as contestants try to buy stickers to win $100,000 in McDonald's "Build a Big Mac" contest, even though McDonald's says such actions will make a contestant

One Kansas City woman, Brenda Williams White, said Tuesday she would pay $35,000 to anyone who sells her the sticker-number 500-she needs to complete the $100,000 top row of the game card.

She also said McDonald's statement would not cause her to cease her efforts to buy a winning sticker.

"How would they (McDonald's) know about it?" she said. "I'm quite sure people do that all the time."

In fact, White said, last year she won $500 in a similar contest, sponsored by a supermarket, by trading stickers with her mother.

A SPOKESWOMAN for McDonald's said Tuesday that people who are placing ads in newspapers in order to buy winning stickers are violating the rules of the game and are ineligible for the $100,000 prize.

People visiting a McDonald's restaurant receive a small sticker with a number corresponding to a number on a playing sheet. By filling in the top row of the sheet with four stickers, a contestant wins the $100,000 prize.

McDonald's said there are only four such prizes and two have already been awarded. Contestants have determined that the sticker with a number 500 is the rare one, and some have placed ads in newspapers hoping to buy one.

Stephanie Skurdy, manager of corporate communications at McDonald's headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill., said "That's contrary to the rules of the game. Those people who are soliciting pieces, we can not condone that action."

"The rules state that there are two permitted ways to obtain a game piece. One, by visiting a McDonald's restaurant or two, by

Alcohol, medicine bad mix for Winn

LAWRENCE (AP) - U.S. Rep. Larry Winn (R-Kan.) said Tuesday he plans to be more careful about mixing alcohol with medication after spending about an hour in jail Monday night on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

The 3rd District representative was released on a $500 signature bond and ordered to appear at 11 a.m. Thursday in Douglas County District Court.

"I regret the incident," Winn said. "It's not very smart."

Winn was arrested at 10:25 p.m. by a Kansas Highway Patrol trooper who said he observed Winn's car cross the center line and travel erratically on Kansas 10 about 10 miles east of Lawrence.

"I asked him if he was on any type of medication and he said no," Trooper Clifford White said, but Winn later claimed he was not intoxicated and attributed his arrest to a combination of alcohol and medication for high blood pressure.

Winn was taken into custody after failing to pass a coordination test White gave him along the highway. He was booked into the Douglas County Jail about 11 p.m. He was released about 11:55 p.m.

White said Winn refused to take blood or breath tests after he failed the coordination test, which Winn said was difficult for him because of his artificial right leg.

"I don't think I was a danger to anyone," Winn said in Lawrence, where he attended several functions. He said he found his first time in jail to be "quite an experience."

Winn was in Lawrence on Monday to attend a meeting of his space and science technology advisory committee. He attended a reception and dinner later that night and had "a couple of drinks."

Winn said he took medication for high blood pressure before beginning the 35-mile drive to his Overland Park home.

"My wife has noticed this before and warned me about it," he said of drinking while taking medication. "She says I slur my words and slow down."

Winn, who has represented the 3rd District since 1966, spent Monday night with friends in Lawrence after his release from sending a written request to a specified post office box," Skurdy said.

"The rules further state that game pieces are not transferable. A person claiming a prize by obtaining a game piece obtained in violation of the rules would not be making a valid claim and therefore could not win a prize," she said.

SKURDY SAID McDonald's does not have a staff member whose full-time job is to investigate rule violations, but if there were suspicion on an individual case it would be checked.

"We've tried to notify newspapers where ads have been placed," she said.

Sterling Hall, of Sublette, Kan., recently advertised in newspapers in Dodge City, Garden City and Liberal, offering $500 for a number 500 sticker.

In response to the ad, he heard from a Garden City man who said he had such a sticker, but that he'd already been offered $20,000 for it.

Hall said he then made an offer of $25,000, but hasn't heard from the man again.

When told of the McDonald's rules, Hall said, "I don't know how they'd be able to stop the trading."

Hall said he would continue to try to buy a winning sticker and wouldn't worry about being disqualified.

"The people I've been in contact with know that I pay them only if I get the (prize) money," he explained.

K-State faculty members return from fact-finding trip in Nigeria

By PAM VAN HORN Collegian Reporter

Six leading K-State faculty members returned March 29 from a two week study and evaluation of ways to help improve and expand educational opportunities at two 2-year educational institutions, the Agriculture College and the Advanced Teachers College, in Jalingo, Gongola, a three-year-old state in Nigeria.

The study is a joint effort of the Gongolan government and K-State's International Agriculture Program and Song Abubhar Ahmed, a K-State graduate in agriculture education and current principal of the Agriculture College in Gongola, according to Ralph Field, head of adult education and member of the K-State delegation.

"The purpose of the trip was to strengthen acquaintances and discuss with the staff of the (Gongola's) Agriculture College and the Advanced Teachers College to see how they help students," he said.

Field was joined by Vegnon Larson, director of international student programs; Owen Koeppe, University provost; Ruth Hoeflin, dean of the College Home Economics; William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences; and David Mugler, associate dean of agriculture and director of resident instruction.

K-STATE WAS invited to send a delegation last December when members of the Nigerian schools were visiting on campus.

The principal of each college invited their alma maters to help evaluate and improve Gongola's present educational system, Field said. They also invited a delegation from the University of Wisconsin because the principal of the advanced teachers college is a Wisconsin graduate.

According to Mugler and Hoeflin, Gongola's system of colleges is designed under the British system—a two-year study program without degree—with limited facilities because they are relatively new.

The colleges are located in the northern section of the state which is primarily agricultural, according to Field. The southern sects are more industrialized.

Because they are in an agricultural area, agricultural education is a priority to the Gongolan government, Mugler said. Their main agricultural concern is feeding its growing population—now over 80 million.

Hoeflin said the advanced teachers college is also important, primarily because it offers progams to train students to live like the majority of Nigerian people—in housing facilities without plumbing or sanitation systems. Therefore if some people need help the trained persons can relate to the problems because they may have experienced them, she said.

THE TEACHERS college is housed in buildings, Hoeflin said, but most of the agriculture school is set up in the fields.

The Gongolan officials are interested in changing to the degree system to improve educational resources as the people's ability to be self-sufficient, according to Field.

He cited four areas that K-State could help the colleges.

One area would be to provide a better opportunity for Nigerian students to come to K-State and receive a bachelors, masters or doctoral degree, Field said.

Another area is to train, in a short-term program, students willing to teach others in technical and professional careers, he said.

The last two areas Field said were to recruit U.S. graduates to teach in the Gongolan colleges for two years; and to help find books and materials to aid the students.

Field said he believes the Nigerian people are willing to learn.

They are a "group of individuals, of people who have the desire to increase education and overcome obstacles," he said.

The obstacles, Field said, are the fact that Gongola, and Nigeria as a whole, are developing nations which still need many advancements.

The future of education at both colleges will depend on training Gongola's people, Field said.

margin. A desperation heave from the right corner by Bird hit the side of the backboard at the buzzer.

The second game of the best-of-seven conference final will be here Wednesday night before the series shifts to Philadelphia for games Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

Toney, who was Philadelphia's No.1 draft choice, had scored 35 points in the regular season finale when Philadelphia dropped a 98-94 decision at Boston, giving the Celtics the Atlantic Division title. But this time, his big game off the bench took away the home court advantage in this series, an edge that Boston had gained in their previous meetings.

Toney had seven points and three assists in a 19-4 Philadelphia surge that turned a 83-78 deficit into a 97-87 lead with 5:58 to play.

Boston stormed back, scoring eight points in a row and finally pulling even at 101-101 on a basket by Cedric Maxwell with 51 seconds to play.

Phil Ford, Kansas City's standout pointguard, was a surprise starter, his first game action since he suffered an eye injury Feb.

However, Ford managed only two points in the first half and like many of the Kings, committed numerous turnovers that thwarted each attempted rally.

Ernie Grunfeld, who kept the Kings together during playoff victories over Portland and Phoenix, had 20 points and Scott Wedman, 19.

The Wildcats will try to improve their scorecards from the past weekend after they failed to place in the Wichita Classic and lost to Fort Hays State Monday.

Brad Johnson and Jon Carlson, top finishers last weekend, will lead the 'Cats at Drake.

Final team standings last year at the relays had K-State in seventh place out of a field of 18 teams. Minnesota won the tournament, followed by Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

The next meet for the men will be the Big 8 Tournament at Lawrence, May 1-2.

Boston Marathon lures K-State running trio

Collegian Reporter

The reasons were different, but the event was the same.

The event was the 85th running of the Boston Marathon, held Monday, and three of the near 9,000 entrants running were K-

According to Massachusetts native Tony Wilcox, assistant professor in health, physical education and recreation, "the Boston Marathon is like a homecoming."

"The Boston is also a nice running event because of the tradition, national attention and the large turnout of spectators," he added.

The Boston Marathon is nothing new to Wilcox. He finished his sixth marathon in an unofficial time of 2.29:00. In 1976, Wilcox finished 15th in the marathon with a time of

For first-timer Dan Laurizio, graduate student in landscape architecture, "the Boston is a long-time goal I set when I started running to achieve."

LAURIZIO SET HIS goal at 2.40:00, but because of a leg injury before the race he was not able to reach it.

"The Boston is an end to a phase of my running," said Ron Sullivan, assistant professor of landscape architecture. "I would like to try some different things."

Sullivan finished his first Boston Marathon in an unofficial time of 2.52:00, just under his three-hour goal.

Training for a marathon includes many different activities.

Sullivan's training methods include running, bicycling and a special diet beginning the week before a marathon.

ACCORDING TO Sullivan, he averages 60 miles of running per week, raising that average to 80 miles closer to a marathon. He also rides his bicycle to and from work.

His special diet consists of mostly protein foods the first part of the week, switching to carbohydrates for the second part of the Laurizio's present mileage is 80 to 95 miles per week. He bicycles 15 miles a week and plays handball once every two weeks. He does not include any special diet in his training.

The only activity in Wilcox's training is running. For marathon running he averages 90 to 100 miles per week, cutting that average 80 to 90 miles per week closer to marathon time. He began training for the Boston in December.

In order for a runner to participate in the Boston Marathon, he has to qualify at one of the many certified marathon races across the nation, Laurizio said. A certified race is 26 miles, 385 yards, he added.

ONCE A RUNNER has qualified, he is iven a number which identifies his starting position in the marathon.

Laurizio qualified in December at a Dallas marathon with a time of 2.45:00.

Sullivan qualified last spring in Lincoln, Neb. with a time of 2.46:00. Sullivan also competed in the Topeka Sunflower State marathon, taking first place.

For Wilcox, the Kansas City Marathon qualified him for the Boston. He finished the Kansas City one with a time of 2.37.00.

According to Laurizio, "the Boston is a tough race to have a good time in because of the qualifying."

'Cat softball team loses 2 games

Janel Anderson hit Laurie Hill with a pitch with the bases loaded in the 10th inning to force in a run and give Emporia State a 1-0 win over K-State Tuesday in the first game of a women's college softball doubleheader at Emporia.

The second game was far less suspenseful. Scoring seven runs in the first inning with the help of two errors and three walks, Emporia State, the defending AIAW Division II national champions, cruised to a

The games were originally scheduled for Manhattan's CiCo Park, but wet grounds forced them to be moved to Emporia.

The Wildcats, 18-17, fell into trouble in the 10th inning of the first game when Anderson walked the first two batters, followed by an error by third baseman Pat Howard on a sacrifice attempt that loaded the bases.

Other problems involved with the Boston, according to Laurizio, is the number of runners lined up 100 to 150 yards deep at the start, making it one to two minutes before some runners cross the starting line.

"The first mile is the worst and most hectic because the race starts in Hopkinton, which has 20 to 30-feet wide streets," he SPECTATORS JUMPING in the race has always been a problem, Sullivan said. These people make it hard to set a running pace.

As far as the race itself, "it was quite an experience," Sullivan said.

He went on to say that the spectators were great and he "never before ran in a race where two-thirds of the entire course was lined with people."

"The spectators were a tremendous experience," Sullivan said. "If it hadn't been for the spectators I would have stopped and walked a few miles."

Sullivan also said it was hard to run the Boston because of all the people, but that it was worth it.

About his performance, Sullivan said he believed that he "ran the Boston as a small marathon as far as training and before warmups. It was 1:20 before he crossed the starting line, he added.

"Basically, the whole thing was exciting for me," Sullivan said.

Vet students to study bird care through addition of aviary room

Collegian Reporter

Vet students will soon be able to gain practical experience in working with exotic birds at the College of Veterinary Medicine in a new aviary room, expected to be in operation next fall.

"Our aviary room is an attempt to provide some hands-on experience for our students in the area of caged-bird management," said Dr. Robert Taussig, associate professor of surgery and medicine.

The aviary room will house parakeets, cockatoos, cockatiels, finches, canaries and perhaps some parrots, he said.

The training in bird care will take place during the final two years of a student's vet school career, while he is working in clinical medicine, Taussig said.

In clinical medicine, a veterinary student currently works with cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, dogs and cats, but no birds.

"The knowledge of medication, care, treatment and management of these birds has been deficient," Taussig said.

Additional training is needed, Taussig said, because Americans are acquiring more caged birds now. The reason may be that birds are easier to care for in apartments, he said. Landlords might allow apartment dwellers to have birds, but no dogs or cats.

THE VETERINARY STUDENTS will spend part of each semester in clinical rotation, observing and working with birds in the aviary, Taussig said.

"We will have healthy and normal birds and teach students to understand reproduction, production and nutrition processes," he said.

"A great number of these caged birds are exotic," Taussig said, "and most come from other countries.

"For that reason, we have to learn to reproduce these birds in our own environment. The aviary will be used to teach our students how to get good reproduction.

"We will try to pair them up and have babies. This will give an opportunity for students to study the problems we see in reproducing these species," Taussig said.

The students will also gain an opportunity to study nutrition, behavior, recognize disease and learn to restrain the birds without injuring them, he said.

THE ROOM will have special features to provide an ideal environment for the birds.

"We will need special lights and we will need to control the temperature and humidity of the room," Taussig said. "When you have as many as 100 to 200 birds, they produce dust and extra humidity."

Vet students are making bird cages using a technique from Travnicek, Taussig said.

"There are lots of details to work out, such how to plug this in to our clinical curriculum, what students will feed them, handle eggs and so forth," Taussig said. "A million administrative details are probably going to hold us up rather than simply getting the birds in here."

The aviary will not be open to the public because the birds are shy and not receptive to visitors, he said.

THE AVIARY is a cooperative effort between Taussig, the vet school and Dr. Robert Travnicek, an adjunct professor at K-State and practicing physician in Wilbur,

Officials cleared of illegal acts

WASHINGTON (AP) - The internal Justice Department investigation of Billy Carter's relationship with Libya concluded Tuesday that no government officials engaged in illegal conduct.

The department's internal watchdog, Michael Shaheen Jr., submitted his final report to Solicitor General Wade McCree, who concurred in Shaheen's findings.

In closing his nine-month investigation after more than 50 interviews here and abroad, Shaheen specifically rejected any allegations of misconduct by then-President Jimmy Carter and members of his administration. Shaheen repeated his conclusion, contained in an interim report released by the Senate just before last fall's presidential election, that Billy Carter lied to government agents who were investigating whether he was required to register with the Justice Department as an agent of the Libyan government.

Travnicek presently keeps and cares for many exotic birds in a large aviary room in Wilbur. Travnicek said he is contributing most of the funds for the aviary project.

"I am providing the birds in terms of green money," Travnicek said. "I donate money to them, and we'll eventually buy our stock (of birds) out of that."

Other financing is provided through departmental funds. Students are also donating their time to build the cages, Currently, groups of veterinary students are sent to Nebraska for instruction under Travnicek, because he is "an expert in his field," Taussig said. They work with him for several days at a time.

"During this time, I teach them how to handle, care, recognize disease and general birds management," Travnicek said.

Projected enrollment decline may cost K-State

Collegian Reporter

Increased tuition and decreased financial aid may not be the only financial problems facing K-State next fall. The University may also have decreased revenue if enrollment projections are correct.

Fall enrollment in 1981 is estimated to drop from the current figure of 19,140 to 18,392, according to K-State enrollment projections.

Enrollment projections for regent institutions are compiled by

By GERI GREENE the Board of Regents, based on the birth rate in Kansas.

"We're in a period of decreasing birth rate and there is no evidence this will quit, although it may stabilize by 1990," Donald Hoyt, director of educational research,

A DECLINE in enrollment would decrease funds generated by the student activity fee, which pays for many of the social services on

"A decrease in enrollment will surely decrease the student activity fee," Susan Angle, coordinator of student activities, said.

"National studies are indicating the trend that our student body will also be different with more older students, more minority students, and more non-traditional students," Angle said. "Continuing education and off-campus students don't pay an activity fee, so if the number of these students increase our activity fee will decrease."

There will be fewer students and a larger proportion will be students who don't have to pay an activity

"We'll have more part-time students who pay $12.20 per semester for their activity fee and more students in continuing education who take off-campus courses and don't pay an activity fee," Angle said. Full-time students pay $25.25 each semester in activity fees.

"We won't have any bigger pie, but more pieces to come out of it," Angle said.

"With more non-traditional students, perhaps some student service will be more important to fund, such as infant and child care. because of the change in the type of student attending K-State," Angle said.

THE PROJECTED enrollment decrease has prompted Student Senate to establish a new account, Reserves for Maintenance of Standing Programs, which will accumulate funds to be used for funding social services when the activity fee decreases. This account has been tentatively approved by senate at $10,000.

All of the social services at K-State are fully or partially funded by the activity fee which Student Senate allocates.

"If we face a smaller budget we'll just have to cut budgets of the social services we fund," Angle

STUDENTS WOULD receive fewer social services and at the same time would probably be able to receive less financial aid.

"The federal government indicates that we will have less financial aid next year, but we really don't know how much this will affect enrollment next fall," Hoyt said. "We'll just have to wait and see.

"I am fretful about this fall, especially if we have decreased financial aid," Hoyt said. "The words I'm hearing are that we may have to be prepared for a loss of one to two thousand in the fall or at least within the next three years."

BECAUSE ENROLLMENT partially determines a university's funding, a severe decrease in enrollment may also force K-State to use financial exigency plans, Hoyt said. Financial exigency plans call for a reduction of faculty if resource decreases are such that the University can't fund tenured faculty.

The exigency plan is the result of a recommendation process by the University's Long-Range Planning Committee, Faculty Senate, Counsel of Deans, and other administrators who have been approved by President Duane Acker,

"If it drops so low we have to exhaust all our current funds we'll move to this exigency plan," he

However, Hoyt said it would be at least two years before the University felt the effects of a decline and at least five years before the exigency plan would be implemented.

"The University would probably release people not tenured and those not on a tenure track and those in temporary positions first," Hoyt said. "Vacancies of those who retire or resign might remain unfilled also, but I see no realistic threat to tenured faculty and probably not to those on a tenure tract."

K-STATE IS NOT expected to be the only regent institution to feel effects of decreased the enrollment.

"All the other regent institutions will face decreased enrollment too," Hoyt said. However, "decreased enrollment hits institutions at different paces. History has it that decreased enrollment has usually been tougher for the little schools."

The effect of decreased enrollment at K-State could be eased if the University begins to prepare for it now.

"There's no long-range planning done," Kelly Presta, student senator and sophomore in political science, said. "I plan to propose legislation concerning the effect of a decrease in enrollment after final allocations.

"What I propose to do is to create a committee which I call the Budgetary Review and Planning Committee, which would take the figures of predicted enrollment and analyze their effect on the student activity fee," he said. "They would also take surveys of students to find out what services students want most and make recommendations to senate which may involve combining or cutting some services."

"The time for change is now," Presta said.

Refugee's case may set precedent who is seeking release from a federal prison may be decided Thursday with the possibity of establishing a precedent for 1,500 other imprisoned Cuban nationals.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers said Wednesday he will issue an order Thursday after reading the latest exhibits submitted in the case of Pedro Rodriguez.

U. S. Attorney James Buchele asked the court to delay for 24 hours the effective time of any order that might free Rodriquez so the government will have an opportunity to seek a stay.

Rodriquez, 48, was an inmate of a Cuban prison at the time he was given an opportunity to come to the United States along with approximately 130,000 other Cuban nationals in June 1980.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service determined he was not entitled to remain in the United States but has not been able to get Cuba to take him back.

Last Dec. 31, Judge Rogers issued an order giving the government 90 days to terminate the detention of Rodriquez. The judge said if the detention was not terminated by the end of that period, he would release the prisoner on parole.

The 90 days expired at the first of the TOPEKA - The case of a Cuban refugee month, but Judge Rogers said it was necessary for attorneys representing Rodriquez to file a motion to proceed. He said Wednesday's hearing was delayed because Rodriquez had been transfered from the federal prison at Leavenworth to one at Atlanta, and the government had been granted a continuance.

Since the Rodriquez case was filed, a class-action suit on behalf of other Cuban nationals has been filed and is pending in the U.S. District Court here.

Buchele said the decision in the Rodriquez case would have no immediate impact on the class action suit, but could establish a precedent for that case.

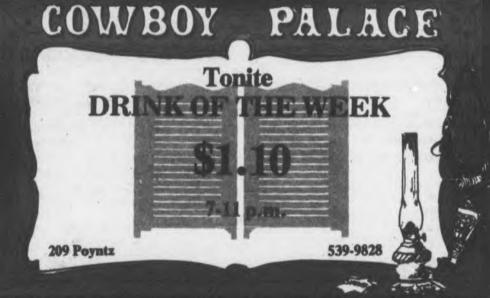

In his December order, Judge Rogers said the government could accomplish the termination of Rodriguez' detention in several ways: deportation, release on parole, or a procedurally adedquage hearing by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine whether futher detention of the petitioner is warranted.

In Wednesday's hearing, Henri Watson, Kansas City attorney representing Rodriquez, said the government had produced no evidence that it is complying with the court's order, only excuses.

In the past, anticipated enrollment declines have not materialized however, and there has been no need to enact changes.

"Part of the trouble with declining enrollment is that other projected declines haven't come true," Angle said.

"It's hard for most people to believe when it hasn't happened yet, but I am convinced that with the dropping birth rate we will see a decrease in enrollment soon."

PEOPLE MAY NOT trust enrollment projections because they have failed to come true and they are dependent on many different factors.

"Since the mid-1970s, calculating new enrollment has become a lot more difficult," Hoyt said.

There are some factors that may offset the effects of the declining birth rate on enrollment.

"We have had considerable interest on the part of married women and non-traditional students and they have become a larger portion of our students," Hoyt said.

"There has also been a change in student mores," Hoyt said. "Before, when students sat out a semester they didn't come back, now they are coming back and this complicates projections. Also, as unemployment goes up our enrollment tends to go up, but we don't know what will happen next year."

Steineger plans severance tax revival

TOPEKA — Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City) will introduce next Wednesday a new bill to enact a severance tax in Kansas, including most provisions of a bill killed earlier by a Senate committee.

Steineger's strategy is to get the bill debated and voted upon by the full Senate, by getting a simple majority of the Senate to suspend a rule which prohibits consideration of bills introduced late in the session by individual legislators.

He believes he can do that by introducing and winning adoption of a companion resolution to suspend the rule.

Steinger scheduled a news conference for 10 a.m. here Thursday to reveal his plan for resurrecting the favorable parts of a severance tax bill killed April 1 on a 6-5 vote of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee.

Brady undergoes additional surgery

WASHINGTON — White House press secretary James Brady, wounded in last month's assassination attempt on President Reagan, underwent surgery Wednesday night as doctors attempted to close a passage permitting air into his brain. "Everything is OK," a spokesman said.

Rich Ellis, a spokesman at George Washington University Hospital, described the operation, which began at 6 p.m. CST, as "non-urgent surgery."

The surgery came a few hours after doctors inserted two needles into Brady's head to release air trapped inside his brain, hospital spokesman Dr. Dennis O'Leary said.

O'Leary said the air passage, from Brady's sinuses into his brain, probably was the result of the bullet which pierced his skull in the March 30 attack on Reagan as the presidential party left a Washington hotel.

O'Leary said the insertion of the needles amounted to a minor procedure that was not emergency action.

Pie 'creams' Buckley during speech

TUCSON, Ariz. - A cream pie struck William Buckley, editor of the National Review and host of the television show "Firing Line," during a reception at the University of Arizona Tuesday night, university police said.

Buckley was hit on the side of the head, but did not appear injured and did not file a complaint, police said.

Buckley, known for his conservative views, was attending a reception sponsored by the College Republicans after a campus speech.

FBI checks claim of civil rights figure

ATLANTA - The head of the FBI's Atlanta bureau said Wednesday that his agency would "check out" claims made by a controversial civil rights figure who says he thinks he knows who is responsible for the slayings of six or more young blacks.

John Glover, special agent in charge of the Atlanta FBI office, made the statement after a three-hour meeting with Roy Innis, who claimed at a news conference earlier Wednesday to have a photograph of the person he suspects.

"I have just had a very productive and very informative meeting with Mr. Innis," Glover said. "I certainly consider it important. We will be checking it out. We are taking a look at what we have."

At Wednesday's news conference, Innis, who is being challenged by dissidents as head of the New York-based Congress for Racial Equality, said his organization will "make the collar" if police do not arrest the individual in the photograph within 72 hours.

LEEDS, Ala. - Ron Cansler passed the time during a 100-mile drive by talking to his wife Donna, who he thought was napping in the back seat-she wasn't there, she was stranded at a service station.

"I should have realized something was wrong when she didn't answer," he said.

The Canslers, of Buford, Ga., were driving from Atlanta to Arkansas on Tuesday when he pulled into the station here about 4:30

He went inside to get a map. She woke up and went to the restroom.

Scrambling, screaming and making laws

The annual Three-day Scramble and Scream Fest (known in some circles as the "veto session" of the Kansas Legislature) will begin April 29.

As indicated by its unofficial name, the clean-up session does not include the most studious three days in the life of a legislator.

Every year the members of the House and Senate meet for almost three months-holding committee hearings, carefully debating issues and conscientiously considering legislation on the floors of the two houses. From January to April this year, the Senate met 62 days and the House 63.

Then they recessed for almost three weeks to give Gov. John Carlin time to decide what he's going to do with the legislation which has been sent to his desk.

After the recess, the legislators will return to Topeka from the constituent fields of Kansas and finish business for another year.

The problem with the veto session is that the careful consideration given legislation in the early days of the session is often shunted aside, with legislators anxious to return to neglected businesses and farms. The final days of the regular session can also be a

Last year, several conference committee members loudly traded capital improvements projects at the state's schools like coveted baseball cards.

This year, the last-minute manipulations of the state's future will center around the school finance law and a tax increase.

Carlin proposed a severance tax, the House passed one, but it was killed in a Senate committee.

The next step was passage of the school finance law, through which the state provides about half the funding for elementary and secondary education. Carlin vetoed it because it would have allowed an "unacceptable" statewide property tax increase. Although House Speaker Wendell Lady (R-Overland Park) has indicated there will be no action in the House unless the Senate reconsiders the severance tax-legislative actions from previous years foreshadow at least some kind of attempt to pass a tax increase. Across the rotunda, Senate President Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) one of the principal severance tax opponents, may hold fast, but the Senate is somewhat notorious for last-minute schemes. Proposed increases in the sales tax, the motor fuels tax and, of course, the severance tax, were rejected during the regular session.

There will probably be attempts to revive them all during the veto session. The voters deserve more.

Legislators are elected to represent the interests of the voters in the state's lawmaking body.

There should be some method for retaining the deliberation the Legislature uses so carefully during initial days of the session.

Whether that method involves electing a full-time Legislature or extending the session, it should be done. Running the state has become a big business. It shouldn't be left to quickly conceived notions.

Concession procession

When the weekend finally arrives, or when I have a free evening, I find it difficult to get excited about the prospect of going to attend a movie in Manhattan. It didn't used to be the way.

There was a time when I was enthusiastic about the movies in town-a time when I actually didn't object to paying the inflated prices, the uncomfortable seats and the gum on the theater floors which usually ended up on my feet.

But movies just aren't what they used to be. How can you justify spending $3 and two hours time to see a film which offers minimal aesthetic value, has a plot which escapes even the most avid Hollywood movie buff and the excitement of watching pro-golf on television?

A RECENT EXAMPLE of this is "The Postman Always Rings Twice." The movie industry took a decent mystery movie and transformed it into a two-hour, sexfilled extravaganza that says little and makes less sense. Saying the movie industry butchered the original version would be too kind.

Of course the horror movies Following the appearance of "The calm love story or Disney flick. But While I have to admit I was one of the millions who spent the money to see "The Exorcist," I have refused to support such films since that time. And until recently I failed to understand why the horror films have gained such a tremendous momentum.

HOWEVER, prior to the 1981 Academy Awards presentation, CBS aired a show which explained why movies such as "Teenage Witch" and "The Force in Grandma's Room" are so popular, and more importantly, why the theaters continue to show them, over and over and over again.

Surely the theaters do not believe they will be showing a quality film when they rent horror movies. But they will be making a bundle of money-and it won't be from ticket the theater probably won't take in a large profit. Or the theater can show a nail-biter film that seeks to horrify the viewers. These usually trigger appetites to control the nerves during the film-as well as rotten teeth and upset stomachs.

IN LARGER CITIES the theaters in malls often have two concession areas to tempt the viewers, one outside the theater and another strategically located inside, just before views enter the film arena. Maybe if we're lucky, we can be subjected to such luxuries following completion of a downtown mall in Manhattan.

Knowing this information, I can understand why the theaters keep a horror flick for weeks while movies such as "Ordinary People" experience such a short life in local

I suppose there isn't a great deal the public can do to change the situation. Certainly we could boycott the horror films and hold out for quality. But that would be asking too much. So if you feel compelled to attend these supernatural exploitations, at least avoid the candy counter. Maybe the film will get the hint and leave

Study is waste of money

Editor,

When I read the article "Students Ignorant of Foreign Affairs," I could not help but be greatly offended by the implications. I will not dispute the findings of the survey. Never-theless, I am angered by certain points. While a majority of college students are ignorant of foreign affairs, what does this prove?

We have nothing to compare these findings to. I would even go further and suggest that the majority of the voting American public itself is just as ignorant and apathetic, if not more so, to a significant degree.

Another point this study seems to overlook is the fact that most college students have many things themselves with other than foreign

I also have a feeling that this study is probably going to be used to justify a cut in government and for higher education. I find it very interesting that this new administration, that is eager enough more important to concern to cut government spending, is equally eager to waste its money on such inconclusive studies. Instead of spending money studying college students, maybe the money should be spent educating those same students.

Yearly housing costs may be $1,740 in 1982

Increases in residence hall rates for the fall 1982 semester were tentatively approved by the Housing Council Wednesday at a meeting in the Union.

The committee gave tentative approval to an increased yearly rate of $1,740. The current yearly rate is $1,450 and the rate recently approved for fall is $1,560. A final decision on the proposal will be made in the fall semester.

"This is tentative," said Chet Peters, chairman of the Housing Council and vice president of student affairs. "It would give time for some study and update for fall and any refinements may come in."

The increase is necessary because of the rising costs of operating the residence hall system, Thomas Frith, director of housing,

The need for new refrigerators and ovens in the residence hall food service centers is also contributing to the need for more money, said Jean Riggs, associate director

Winn pleads guilty, pays fine for DWI

LAWRENCE (AP) - Rep. Larry Winn (R-Kan.) appeared in court a day earlier than expected and pleaded guilty Wednesday to a charge of driving while intoxicated and under the influence of prescription drugs.

Winn, 61, appeared in Douglas County District Court, where he entered the plea and paid a $175 fine and court costs. He was placed on probation for the term of a 30-day iail sentence.

Winn also was given a one-year restriction on his driver's license, prohibiting him from driving within 24 hours after he has consumed alcohol. Winn had been ordered to appear in court by this morning, but the Douglas County district attorney's office said a defendant in such cases may appear

Winn was arrested Monday night after a Kansas Highway Patrol trooper saw his car cross the center line and travel erratically on Kansas 10, about 10 miles east of Lawrence.

Winn issued a statement Wednesday about the incident.

"I personally believe that the combination of my blood pressure medication Aldomet, alcohol and a full and tiring schedule of appearances have probably caused a loss of coordination and this resulted in the erratic driving noticed by the trooper," he said.

of housing and food service coordinator.

Discussion of a committee report concerning possible changes in the proposed 1981 graduate student housing facilities plan was tabled until the next Housing Council meeting on May 6, so Frith can confer with the committee that prepared the recommendation.

The recommendation would set aside a wing of Jardine Terrace for graduate students. Eight, one-bedroom apartments equipped with kitchens, would be available, with two students per room. Graduate students are currently scattered throughout the residence hall system. The current plan for next fall would allow graduate students to live in Edwards Hall.

Under the new recommendation, the rooms at Edwards Hall that were to be used for graduate student housing would be reserved for overflow housing at the beginning of the fall semester.

The ad hoc committee that prepared the recommendation was formed in response to complaints about the conditions of graduate housing by representatives of the Graduate Student Council, said Mike Pezza, president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls and sophomore in political science,

The recommendation explains that graduate students living at Jardine Terrace, will also solve the noise and privacy problem the graduate students have ex-

The recommended change would also allow students to prepare their own meals, without paying for the residence hall's food service program. The recommendation stated that some graduate students have complained because the meal program did not fit into their schedules.

Shootout leaves 4 wounded in Kentucky

Striking coal miners, truckers open fire independent coal truckers opened fire on each other Wednesday in eastern Kentucky and four men were shot and wounded, authorities said. All were reported hospitalized in satisfactory condition.

The shootout on the 27th day of a strike by the nation's 160,000 United Mine Workers (UMW) came as a convoy of 10 coal trucks headed for a non-union mine that pickets have been trying to close in Belfry, Ky.

Truckers and pickets accused each other of starting the gun battle on U.S. Route 119. State troopers, who converged on the scene with riot guns, said the injured men were taken to Appalachian Regional Hospital in South Williamson, Ky.

It was the latest in a series of violent in- reopened.

A group of striking union miners and cidents in eastern Kentucky, where a number of non-union truckers and coal companies have continued to operate despite picketing.

"They opened up on us from the hills," said John Seats, a spokesman for the truckers. "They shot the radiators out of two of the trucks and one driver had his windshield shot out."

A picket who identified himself only as a union miner called Seats' account "a bunch

"They started the shooting and wounded one of our buddies," he said.

In nearby Hatfield, Ky., meanwhile, company guards toting carbines stood watch as a non-union coal handling plant

With contract talks stalled, a group of smaller coal companies planned a meeting Wednesday night in Charleston, W.Va., to consider sidestepping the Bituminous Coal Operators Association (BCOA) and asking for separate talks with the union.

The BCOA has rejected the union's latest overture to resume talks, which broke down last week with industry negotiators calling the UMW's latest contract proposal "completely unrealistic."

Major sticking points include industry demands for elimination of pension fund royalties on non-union coal purchased by union companies, and a probationary period for new employees. Those provisions were included in a contract proposal over-whelmingly rejected by UMW members

The Belfry Coal Corp. opened its Hatfield, Ky., loading facility Wednesday for the first time since pickets shut it down April 2. Fifty carloads of pickets pulled up that day and "told us, in effect, that we could shut down or they would shut us down," said Belfry vice president Tom Tipton.

But now "they've refused to ratify a contract and we feel it's time to get back to work," Tipton said, as guards carrying .30caliber carbines motioned a coal truck through the gates. He said the company decided to resume operations to salvage some 30,000 tons of coal that was beginning to oxidize while lying outside.

Irish youth riot following deaths despite priests' call for peace

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) -Young Roman Catholics, hurling acid bombs and firing ball bearings from sling shots, defied priests and went on a rampage Wednesday after the emotion-packed funerals of two teen-agers. Jailed guerrilla Bobby Sands, in the 53rd day of his hunger strike, sank nearer to death.

The Vatican's envoy in Ireland announced possible intervention by Pope John Paul II to end the fast by the convicted Irish Republican Army terrorist, and the British said they were freeing another jailed guerrilla on medical grounds, but neither move appeared likely to defuse the explosive atmosphere.

The rioting erupted after the funerals of two Catholic teen-agers killed Sunday when a British army vehicle plowed into a mob of rioters hurling gasoline bombs in Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second largest city 65 miles northwest of Belfast, the capital.

The mother of one of the victims hurled herself on the grave at the funeral, and relatives of the other teen-ager collapsed and had to be carried away.

Several hours after the funeral, a mob smashed into an auto showroom in Londonderry, drove out six cars and set them afire. The trouble soon spread to other areas as mobs attacked police with stones, gasoline and acid bombs. Police said some sharp-shooting youngsters used sling shots to fire ballbearings at troops and police.

Youngsters, many of them masked, threw up barricades around the Catholic Bogside and Creggan quarters despite appeals from priests who buried the slain teen-agers not to attack security forces.

In Belfast, stone-throwing Catholic youths attacked security patrols, hijacked four vehicles and set one afire. British troops fired plastic bullets at the mob, and the demonstrators responded with gasoline

One British soldier, hit by a gasoline bomb, leaped from his armored personnel carrier, his uniform blazing, and extinguished the flames in the street.

In Dublin, the papal nuncio, Dr. Gaetano Allibrandi, said after meeting supporters of Sands that the pope could intervene if he received a request to do so and considered it necessary. He noted that the pope has "expressed concern" over the hunger

Allibrandi added that he would visit Sands in prison at any time provided the British government had no objection. Britain's Northern Ireland Office in Belfast said it has not seen any formal request yet, but declined to comment on whether British authorities would allow a visit "at such a sensitive time."

The Northern Ireland Office also said it was releasing jailed guerrilla Dolours Price because she had "deteriorated to the point where she was in imminent danger of sudden collapse and death." It said the balance of her 20-year sentence was cancelled, but that the release had nothing to do with Sands' case.

Miss Price, 30, was suffering from a psychological condition involving chronic lack of appetite. Her sister Marian was freed a year ago after developing the same condition, anorexia nervosa. Both were convicted of terrorist bombings in London in

Professor says feminism is democracy's only hope

By TANYA BRANSON Collegian Reporter

Men who believe in democracy must believe in the feminist movement because it is the only hope for a democratic society, according to Joe Hawes, head of the Department of History.

Hawes spoke in the Union Wednesday on "Men and Feminism," at a nooner sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

Fifteen women and three men attended the nooner, prompting Hawes to comment that he was speaking to the wrong audience.

"It happens a lot, we preach in church," he said. "This should really be given to the men in Fort Riley."

Feminism is "a movement to put an end to ascribed status," Hawes said. Because equality is a fundamental aspect of democracy, feminism is essential, he said.

HE PARALLED the feminist movement to the civil rights movement of the 1960s to end racial discrimination. The goals of both movements-to end the ascribed status and special treatment of blacks and women—are similar, Hawes said.

Men should support feminist causes for several reasons, he said.

Although men who have a strong interest in democracy are obliged to support feminist causes, they often discover it is difficult for the "privileged portion to support something that attacks their portion," he said.

Many of the reasons for men to support feminism are political, Hawes said.

"We need a truly democratic change, any less is merely a delay."

Feminism is a revolutionary movement, therefore a peaceful change is necessary, or violent change is inevitable, Hawes said. A social change must occur to prevent the chaos which comes from revolution and protect property from becoming transitory.

Tentative allocation hearings end tonight

Student Senate will finish 1981-82 tentative allocations tonight, considering funding requests from four remaining campus organizations. 24 organizations have requested funding from senate.

The four organizations remaining on the agenda are MEChA, McCain Fine Arts, Women's Resource Center and International Coordinating Council. Senators will also consider the line-item funding of college councils, Fine Arts Council, K-State Union, and Rec Services.

The Honorariums and Reserves for Contingencies accounts will also be determined before senators vote on the entire senate bill.

Senators will consider the funding bill again when fall student enrollment figures are determined. Each group will have the opportunity to return to senate for a second consideration of their budgets if more money is available. Tentative allocations are made with an estimate of revenues from the fall enrollment.

WhyMe?

Black Americans are more prone to high blood pressure than white Americans.

It can easily be detected by an inexpensive, painless test, and can be treated.

May is High Blood Pressure Month

ANOTHER POLITICAL reason for men to support feminist movements is that all persons are connected by human ties so what affects women will eventually affect men, Hawes said.

"There is a thread that runs through all this," he said. "All the things feminism questions has a direct impact on people. It makes a difference."

Hawes listed four rules men should follow in order for them to support feminism.

The first is for men to keep a distance from feminists because feminism "needs its own space to grow," Hawes said. For men to play a dominant role in a women's movement causes problems because the leadership should come from women, he MEN SHOULD not fall into the trap of altruism, Hawes said. Acts of altruism demean women because they are based an assumptions that women are incompetent to handle specific situations.

Empathy, the "capacity for understanding and appreciating what it is like to be someone else," is Hawes's third rule. Along with empathy, men should give constructive, active criticism to women, Hawes said.

The last rule is that rejection of the feminist movement is the "antithesis of support," he said. Men can't reject feminism and still claim to be democratic, Hawes said.

Feminism gives a "fresh vision" to maternal instinct, heterosexuality, the nuclear family, political structure and the role of power at the personal level, Hawes said. All the issues questioned by those in the feminist movement directly affect people and deserve consideration.

Israel will appeal U.S. shipment of radar planes to Saudi Arabia

Wednesday to fight the sale of American radar planes to Saudi Arabia, claiming the all-seeing eyes in the sky would place an unbearable burden on Israeli defense.

A government statement expressed "profound regret and unqualified opposition" to the White House's decision, announced Tuesday, to sell five AWACS planes to Saudi Arabia.

Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori called it "a very, very unpleasant decision" which Israel would appeal to the Reagan administration and to U.S. public opinion—a clear signal Israel's combative lobby on Capitol Hill will try to block the Observers saw the statement's wording as a sign that, after weeks of debate over whether to take on Washington just before national elections here, the government has opted for a confrontation.

It may have been emboldened by word from the White House that congressional approval won't be sought until after the June 30 Israeli elections. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker (R-Tenn.) had urged the administration to postpone sending the plan to Congress until then, hoping opposition to the sale would abate.

THE DELAY ENABLES Prime Minister Menachem Begin to act tough toward Reagan without risking a prestige blow if the deal is pushed through during the election campaign, political analysts in Zippori said the sale of five AWACS, Airborne Warning and Control Systems, planes, plus advanced gear for 62 F-15 jets Saudi Arabia has on order, are launching an arms race Israel could barely afford.

He said he believes the Jewish state could find ways to deal with the long-distance surveillance planes, but "it will place a heavy burden on our security forces and we are reaching a stage where that burden is becoming too heavy to bear."

Israeli military experts do not show much worry about the fighting capability of the

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - Israel vowed on Saudi army, which has only a quarter of Israel's manpower and less warplanes and tanks than other, more formidable enemies Israel has defeated in past wars.

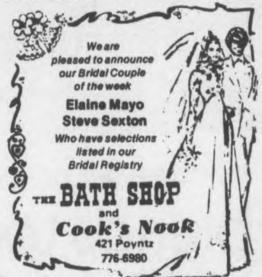

BUT THE AWACS planes are seen here as a flying nightmare-mobile radar stations which can scan every square yard of Israel and monitor every aerial movement from light airplanes to jumbo jets.

In the view of an Israeli aviation strategist, the AWACS planes nullify the basis of Israel's defense—fast, devastating pre-emptive air strikes before Arab ground forces can rally.

Israeli warplanes will be unable to practice new dogfight tactics or test secret weapons unobserved, strategists here warn.

A defense expert says that had the Arabs possessed AWACS planes in 1967, Israel would not have been able to prepare its air blitz unobserved, and the six-day war would have been a lot different. If Israel had shot down a prying AWACS plane, it would have been accused of committing the hostile act that started the war, he said.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington that the arms deal is intended to help counter "the Soviet threat in the Middle East" and has pledged the administration remains committed to Israel's defense.

Small Animal Clinic blends teaching and

By DAMIEN SEMANITZKY

Managing Editor

It's far before 9:30 when the students and staff members in the Small Animal Clinic don clinical white and surgical green in preparation for a day's teaching, practice and learning.

The difference between K-State's Small Animal Clinic and regular private practice veterinary clinic is that K-State's facility functions as a teaching and research facility, as well as a service facility.

DURING THE 1979-80 school year, the hospital serviced over 2,000 horses, almost 3,000 cattle, almost 2,000 pigs, more than 200 sheep, almost 11,000 dogs, and more than 4,000 cats.

Field services (servicing those animals unable to come to the clinic) worked on more than 16,000 cattle during that time, with some of the college's students involved in general practice in Council Grove, working with more than 13,000 animals.

During daytime clinic hours, services are divided into small, large and food animals. According to Dr. Rodney Ferguson, associate professor of surgery and medicine and head of Small Animal Surgery section, approximately 50 percent of all surgery at the clinic is major surgery—including reparation of fractures, correction of intestinal problems and cases referred from around the state.

The other 50 percent, Ferguson said, consists of elective surgery—or "minor" surgery—predominantly spays, castrations and de-claws. Although such surgery is physiologically not "minor" for the animal, it is referred to as such, he said.

OCCASIONALLY, one of the benefits of having a veterinary medical school in town can be monetary. Although the charges for elective surgery are generally approximate to those of general practice, if a client brings in an animal with a complication having special teaching value, and cannot afford the treatment, occasionally the clinic will assume the cost into the school's budget.

Sometimes services which can be used as a learning experience for the students are offered to the client free or at a reduced cost in exchange for letting the school do tests on the animal for teaching or research purposes. The stipulations are that the tests or procedures do not further injure the animal, according to Jacob Mosier, head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine.

However, Ferguson qualified, what the clients are willing to spend for the animal's care are always a major consideration.

"We charge $35 to spay cats here. As you can imagine we don't make cost," Ferguson said. "When you top the anesthetic, the anesthetic machine, the drugs that we use, the instruments that are used, sterilization procedures, there's just no way you can make cost.

"But that's beside the point. We don't try to broadcast so the public know that we don't make cost on certain things. But I think that's the cost it would cost for teaching. Students have to learn."

THE PROCEDURES USED in preparing animals for surgery and in the actual surgery and recovery are similar to those used for humans. In fact, "just almost identical," Ferguson said. "Same sort of sterile technique as far as in surgery, the preparation of the patient is just as you would have done in a hospital."

When an animal first comes in for elective surgery, he receives a complete physical. Students prepare the animal for surgery, and assist in the surgery. Surgical teams usually consist of an anesthetist, a surgeon and an

Although most surgery is performed by Doctors of Veterinary Medicine (DVMs), some surgery like spays, castrations and de-claws is done by the students, supervised by staff members, Ferguson said.

"From our standpoint here, we function as staff people who are DVMs who are training young people with our senior veterinary students," Ferguson said.

After surgery, the animal is taken to a recovery room, where he is supervised by students during the day and

ALTHOUGH THE CLINIC is basically a service and teaching facility, Ferguson said some people in the department do have research projects in progress. For instance, some research is being done by faculty members in the area of bone grafts and techniques that are useful in helping fractures to heal.

Ferguson said more research is needed, and there are several reasons why more research is not currently being done. One, he cited, was the lack of legislative funding in that area, "which hopefully we will have remedied one of these days," he said.

And although most research funding is generated from other sources besides the Legislature, "you have to have enough people to be able to have the time to do the research," Ferguson said. "We are short-staffed throughout this hospital...we need to work on that.

9:15 Tuesday night, April 14 Subject: Black Cockapoo, about 7 years old, about 20 pounds.

Emergency: Struck by car.

Attending: Janet Barr, Jim Garner, senior interns; Dr. William Fortney, small animal clinician on-call and associate professor of surgery and medicine.

(Dog's owner)—"...just went out to do his job, and bang, all of a sudden it happened..."

The Small Animal Hospital becomes a quiet place after the daytime clinic closes—sometimes an atmosphere of relaxation and routine alertness, which sometimes changes gears to an air of lowkey, high-level concentration.
